

The idea for this painting is inspired by a poem inspired by an evening walk through my neighborhood of Oakland, California.

I filled my canvas with the words of this poem and then I deleted all of the words of the poem except the words that I would like you to paint.

I would like you to paint these words in image form. For example, instead of the word 'light' I would like you to paint an image of light. Instead of the word 'orange' I would like you to paint an orange fruit. Or something that is orange.

There is room for you to interpret these words however you imagine them in image form. I would like for you to paint the images in the location of the canvas where the word is located.

The background of the canvas can remain white. The images will appear to be floating in space.

Thank you.

light

orange

ground

road

rocks

sound

horn

moon

coffee

night

trees