

ALASKANA SERIES

a series of eclectic beers that speak our language, so to speak

midnightsunbrewing.com

As in all areas of the world, Alaska has its own vernacular – a unique array of terms that describe life in the Great Land. Inspired by these quirky terms, Midnight Sun is presenting some favorites in the form of beer. So whether you live in Alaska or Outside, let your taste buds interpret our language via your glass.

SLOPER:

This term refers to a slope worker, or someone who works in the oil field industry on the North Slope of Alaska. Slopers usually work 2 weeks on and get 2 weeks off. They work hard; they play hard. Besides the obvious jobs related to extracting crude oil from the earth, there are many other support jobs required to keep crews alive and well in this extreme and secluded part of the world. Our baltic porter represents crude oil, dark days, long stints and lonely time away from family and friends. That being said, this beer celebrates the sacrifices made to get to the flip side.
