

WordstoDeeds Conference 2017: Legal Translation to the Next Level

Top legal translators from 24 countries and 6 continents will be converging on London in early February.

The conference is taking place in the heart of the legal area of the City, and will see delegates discussing such subjects as quality standards for input as well as output, caution in plain language, the application of case law, negligence in translation matters, and managing conceptual differences across jurisdictions.

This first event, in what is set to become an annual fixture, aims to provide a venue for high-quality CPD, networking and headhunting, to build bridges between academia, institutions and practice, and last but not least to raise visibility for this highly skilled but little-known profession.

Delegates registered as of today master a total of 25 languages, going from Arabic, Chinese, and Russian to less prevalent tongues such as Luxembourgish and Finnish, and even more legal systems.

They work for a glittering array of international organizations such as the IMF, Interpol and the CJEU, businesses of all dimensions, global law firms, and of course many also run their own boutique practices.
