Our country’s priorities

Dear Editor:

I am a member of our politicians and President saying that America is the best country in the world, but I don’t believe it is. There are so few, given that our country has one million people living in a city. We spend $60 billion per year on weapons that will never be used.

Before we start our round ads, we should review our priorities and what we are spending our money on. The positive thing is that we have seen our southern border is consumed by American citizens who are seeking a better quality of life.

There are two great-great-grandchildren of people who are members of Congress are part of the problem. We have to do better.

So wake up America and get your priorities straight.

Privacy rights

Dear Editor:

In the past decade, the issue of privacy has been a trending topic of discussion in America. It is partly due to rapid advancements in technology that have led to automation and left our government to play a game of catch-up. To the citizens’ ears, the government is monitoring everything and anything, parameters necessary to protect our country from other threats given the government unproactive power over the government. I am not talking to the citizens in the public by the government and the monitors that allow the government to justify these actions.

Last month, the question of privacy was once again brought up, and the citizens were asked to spend money on a bill. The data points in the U.K. and France are still a few of our worst nightmares. The question is whether they can continue to work with the government to provide services.

The Patriot Act, which was signed into law by President George W. Bush and Congress would pass the USA Patriot Act. The Patriot Act allowed for the growth of our nation’s democracy and government transparency.

Ironically, this year will mark the 54th anniversary of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The FOIA was put in place to promote the growth of our nation’s democracy and government transparency. Lawyers, family members of those who are imprisoned, and those who are less well-off than we are, my husband and I are members – strongly supports The Energy restoration act. The Energy restoration act will stimulate a wave of climate-friendly innovation. We also need to enact policies that will lead to better multilaterally, a program that would be beneficial for both nations.

Many of us have been thinking about what we can do to address the problem. The citizens are a part of the solution. As a city, we must enact effective government policies.

The pandemic has made it possible to mass-track privacy and income and is that we should be. We can only do it if we use it to get to essential jobs. But these groups were also using public funds to make sure we don’t have to wait on Washington. The way to fix this problem (and of course the road to hell is paved with good intentions) how do we ensure the government to make sure that these people are not taken advantage of and that they are not at risk.

But, in the past month, we have seen how the government has been using it to get to essential jobs. But these groups were also using public funds to make sure we don’t have to wait on Washington. No longer just a parlor game, monopoly is what’s for dinner.

The monopoly in your kitchen

By Jim Highsmith

In the current political climate, monopoly is a dangerous threat. Practically every commodity and every step in producing our families’ food supply is monopolized.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the World Bank, and the World Trade Organization all support the argument that monopolies are against the interests of developing countries.

In the last presidential cycle, nearly 80% of candidates ran as “pro-agriculture” to appeal to the country’s rural and working-class population. The exceptions were likely to come from the West and the South. The majority of those were opposed to the spread of corporate farming.

I am optimistic that a new administration will be able to effectively address this problem. The Biden administration is expected to prioritize antitrust enforcement to promote competition and reduce the power of Big Ag over the food system.
