A call to arms! A spectacular reckoning! MANIFESTO is Rotimi Agbabiaka’s latest solo play, in which you the audience, assisted by a cast of historical iconoclasts, will help a young artist fashion a manifesto for a 21st century theatre of liberation. In MANIFESTO, Rotimi Agbabiaka speaks, sings, and screams his way to an art form capable of taking on the unhinged forces of racist, fascist, capitalistic foolishness … and winning. Come prepared to take a stand.

A sequel to the hit show, Type/Caste, MANIFESTO is a portrait of a young artist at a crossroads. When the entertainment industry extends a welcoming hand, this previously excluded queer, black actor must decide whether to pursue the trappings of mainstream success or remain an outsider artist on the road less traveled. While our protagonist ponders the role of theatre in a mad mad world, he is beset by a chorus of creative ancestors, which include James Baldwin,
Nina Simone, and Fela Kuti, the young artist is guided towards a visionary ambition of a manifesto.
