Mission and Vision

There are millions of people across the United States who care about the arts — people who span political, gender, racial, economic, generational, geographical, and other divides.

4A will ensure that creativity, the arts, and arts education are cherished and supported by building a nationwide network to increase participation in the arts and arts advocacy. We will help creators, presenters, and advocates for arts, humanities, and science organizations achieve their goals by sharing their work and magnifying its value.

Benefits

We will attract members by offering an extensive benefits program at a low cost along with social connection opportunities. Our arts, humanities, science, and arts education partners' activities will be promoted to our members — growing audiences. Our advocacy partners will be able to share actions with our members — enhancing existing advocacy efforts. The 4A network will form a creative community that is millions strong.

Website Features

Our website will feature listings of arts and cultural organizations, ongoing and event-based discounts, programming highlights, special invitations, educational activities, and advocacy actions, which will be searchable by geography, interest, age appropriateness, access needs, and more. Other functions will include a try something new feature with suggestions for new experiences and opportunities to connect with other members to attend partner programming.

Partnership

It's free for nonprofit organizations and arts presenters to become 4A partners. Partners will be listed on our website. Once our online membership interface is built, we will reach out to see what our partners would like to share with our members.
