

'In the years I have followed Drendel's work I have come to think of his pictorial vignettes as metaphors for some greater reality. There is something awkward and absurd in our situation as human beings and something which is not immediately intelligible or easily verbalised. These small enigmatic parables may refer to this broader reality.' - Sasha Grishin, 2015

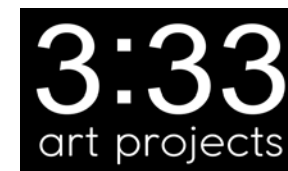

Graeme Drendel has been painting professionally for over thirty years. This significant exhibition showcases works produced from the 1980's through to the present, throughout the artist's explorations in various styles, media and techniques. Following the publication of the detailed monograph Graeme Drendel by Gavin Fry in 2016 and Drendel's major survey exhibition 'Silos + Silence' held at Mildura Regional Gallery in early 2017, this is an exceptional opportunity to view a large overview of works by this prolific and highly regarded artist.

'There is a temptation to analyse all of the strange groupings Graeme Drendel has devised... Many interpretations are possible and they will be equally right or wrong. That is the intriguing thing about so much of Drendel's work – it simply defies explanation. Like a play performed in a foreign language or a fragment from a silent film, we know nothing of what came before or will come after. The artist himself is open, direct, intelligent and engaging, while the products of his mind and hand are in turn obscure, destabilising, puzzling and mystical. The balance of life goes on, the search for meaning through art continues to confound and delight and we cannot ask for more.' Excerpt from Graeme Drendel by Gavin Fry, 2016
