Root Causes: Why Hondurans Flee or Resist

by Gala King

“After witnessing the influx of migrants on the more recent ‘migrant caravans’ predominantly coming from Honduras, I felt called to go to Honduras – to be present to a land that though deeply rich in natural resources and culture was becoming increasingly dangerous, and uninhabitable for its citizenry to the point where people felt compelled to risk their lives and those of their children to escape.” – Gala King

Militarily and politically, the U.S. has also played a major role in Honduras with the signing of the military bases agreement in 1954, providing a strategic location for the U.S. military throughout the Central American wars. In 2009, the U.S. backed the military coup of democratically elected President Manuel Zelaya. Since that coup, the U.S. has backed several fraudulent elections and currently supports the president, Juan Orlando Hernandez (“JOH”), despite the ongoing allegations of corruption and human rights abuses.

About the writer: Gala King
I was raised in Minnesota by an immigrant mother from the Philippines and a human rights activist as my father. I grew to understand how my Filipina American identity was shaped by U.S. foreign policies which colonized my mother’s homeland, and how I carry a deep sense of responsibility to hold my U.S. government accountable for its atrocities locally and abroad.

I have found the space to engage my dual identity in culturally relevant and faith-rooted social movements.

FIND CAUSES

After 150 years of U.S. intervention, the root causes of migration in Honduras include: the government for and of the elite, the military and militarized police, transnational banks and corporations, and an extractive economic model. Combined, these create cycles of violence, impunity, corruption, and inequality, which directly impact the people vis-à-vis organized crime, land displacement, war on the poor, and human rights abuses.

As Father Ismael “Padre Melo” Moreno, a Jesuit priest and the director of Radio Progreso, states, “It is the alliances between oligarchic business and political elites and transnational capital, backed by the U.S. embassy, the armed forces, and people from organized crime, that create the caravans.” These are the root causes of migration.

A delegation of solidarity activists IM4HI partnered with SHARE Foundation, Leadership Conference of Women Religious, and Sisters of Mercy of the Americas to organize an interfaith delegation in March 18-25, 2019. Nearly 75 people answered this call and joined the delegation. It was comprised mostly of people of various faith backgrounds representing different organizations, as well as community organizers and human rights activists. My father, Gary King, a human rights activist, and I were among the 75.

The delegation was hosted by Radio Progreso and ERIC (Equipo de Reflexión, Investigación y Comunicación) in Honduras that have been around for over 60 years, conducting community organizing, investigating human rights abuses, and broadcasting from a community radio station. Since the 2009 military-backed coup, state-sanctioned repression and violence against the people defending land and human rights had been escalating. Radio Progreso was the only radio station covering the grassroots resistance. The director of Radio Progreso and ERIC, Padre Melo, had been seeking international solidarity, calling on the international community to come and be an international public witness to their pursuit for justice.

Community resistance in Guapinol
Since our delegation was so large, we were split into three smaller groups. My father and I traveled to the Bajo Aguan region in the northern, central part of Honduras. When we arrived, I was amazed at the beauty of the land, rich in biodiversity and land area, attracting corporate interests for the tourism, mining, and mono-crop African Palm Oil industry. With the increase in these extractive industries over the past few decades, there was also an increased military presence throughout the Aguan region, which we witnessed.

A crisis developed that had its origins between 2010 and 2014, when a series of mining exploration concessions were granted to mining companies by the Honduran government. This resulted in conflicts between mining companies and local townspeople, and in the contamination of drinking water, including from the Aguan River that runs through the town of Guapinol. In August 2018, prior to our visit, community members set up “Guapinol Dignity Camp” to peacefully protest illegal mining concessions in their community, in an effort to protect their water. After about 90 days, over 1,000 military and police forcibly evicted the community members with tear gas and violence. As a result, 13 of the community leaders were charged with false crimes such as blocking roads, arson, illegal detention, and illicit association. Although the charges were eventually dropped, the government appealed the decision, and the community leaders were still feeling threatened, with many living in hiding.

When our delegation arrived in Guapinol, over 100 community members met us and escorted us to the Aguan River, inviting us to experience the beauty of the river, as we immersed our feet and legs, and participated in a river blessing. Within 20 minutes of the river blessing, an armed military unit appeared on the other side of the river, glaring and taking photos of the community and delegation. The community responded powerfully, chanting at the military to leave, reminding them who the water belonged to. This is their daily reality.

Throughout our trip, we witnessed the community strength and commitment to nonviolent resistance. Despite the militarization of their community and criminalization of their leaders, the Guapinol community leaders continued to organize and speak out against state-sanctioned violence and human rights abuses. Even in the face of death threats and radio equipment being vandalized, the staff at Radio Progreso continued to bravely broadcast the voices of the people. With the ongoing state-sanctioned repression, the community continued to protest in the streets, unifying behind the chant “Fuera JOH!” (Leave, Juan Orlando Hernandez).

ACTION: Act to end U.S. complicity in the root causes of migration from Honduras. Two ways to support Honduras:

Urge Congress to Pass the Berta Cáceres Human Rights Act (H.R. 1945). March 2, 2019 marked the three-year anniversary of the assassination of Berta Cáceres, the Honduran indigenous and environmental rights leader. The Berta Cáceres Human Rights in Honduras Act was reintroduced to continue the call for justice. If passed, this bill would suspend U.S. security assistance to Honduran military and police until certain human rights conditions are met, including justice for Berta Cáceres. Contact your House Representative to urge them to co-sign the bill today.

Support the Fall Tour. In September, Padre Melo will be visiting a few cities in the U.S. on a speaking tour. His presentation will be live-streamed and groups are encouraged to organize viewing sessions. In October, we hope a few Guapinol community leaders will travel to the U.S., speak in 2-3 cities, and receive the prestigious Letelier-Moffitt Human Rights Award, in Washington, D.C. Support these visits by organizing a viewing session for Padre Melo! For this and more information about how to support the tour, contact g5king@msn.org.

PM: What’s on Polly Mann’s Mind Today?

Imagining National Security Advisor John Bolton on an all-expense paid fishing trip in Katmandu, among other thoughts.

by Polly Mann

Behave like guardians of the public’s purse strings!

Public Citizen, the nonprofit organization which has been acting as “the people’s advocate” since 1971, has joined with 21 allied organizations to petition Congress to embrace dramatic cuts in Pentagon spending and stop investing in war. It is working in the coalition with People Over the Pentagon (peopleoverpentagon.org) to send letters to all presidential candidates in a call to “reallocating the bloated Pentagon budget to meet domestic and human needs,” to wage “no war that isn’t legally authorized and paid for,” and to “adhere to our values and work toward international cooperation.” The coalition believes that the military industrial complex has driven Pentagon spending to insane levels — spending more than is spent by the next seven countries combined. It contends that “spending should be reduced at least $200 billion immediately, which would free up over $2 trillion or more over the next decade for domestic and human needs.” This is a start. Of course, Women Against Military Madness would like to see all Pentagon spending reduced even further, to an absolute minimum.

It might be necessary to send John Bolton on a fishing trip to Katmandu with all expenses paid but it would be worth it.

U.S. leads the world in military expense

Obviously world leaders believe that to ensure peace, a country must go to war with the U.S. empire doing all it can to create or reinforce this belief. Each year the sums allocated for military expenditures worldwide have grown larger and larger, with the U.S. taking a strong lead, according to the renowned Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI). When one considers how much is spent in this lethal business, it would probably be enough to end world hunger.

Nuclear weapons in the hands of state terrorists?!

Without a doubt, there should be a stop to the manufacture of all nuclear weapons everywhere. Existing ones need to be dismantled and not “modernized.” The U.S. has an added responsibility to take the lead as the only country in the world to have actually dropped the bomb. But the U.S. administration is going in the opposite direction!

Analyst Chris Hedges, a former The New York Times war correspondent, writes that the Trump administration’s most dangerous foreign policy decision was to share nuclear technology with Saudi Arabia, as it will lead to a grave existential threat for the Middle East and ultimately, the United States. Helping Saudi Arabia nuclearize is without congressional approval. Hedges warns that it’s terrifying to think of nuclear weapons in the hands of despotic Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman (MBS), and ultimately radical jihadists who are supported and funded by powerful elements within Saudi Arabia. The Saudi government spent more than $450,000 in just one month, according to reports, to lobby the Trump administration to approve the purchase of services and equipment. Westinghouse and other U.S. companies, led by retired military men, will profit handsomely. (“Giving the bomb to Saudi Arabia’s Dr. Strangelove” tinyurl.com/y6trhb7o)

And while we’re on the subject of corporate profit —

We pay taxes but profitable megacorporations don’t. Sixty Fortune 500 companies didn’t need to pay taxes in 2018 – that’s more than even in previous years. This is because the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, passed by Congress and signed by Trump at the end of 2017, lowered the corporate tax rate from 35 percent to 21 percent. Amazon, Honeywell, Halliburton, Delta Airlines, Chevron, General Motors, Duke Energy, Occidental Petroleum, Dominion Energy, Deere, and EOG Resources (a hydrocarbon exploration company that split off from Enron) are just a few of the companies that didn’t pay taxes. Some companies even received tax rebates. Specifics at: the Institute on Taxation and Economic Policy tinyurl.com/yy9h4ll8

Our country’s military funding is at the expense of healthcare, education, and human needs. ☺

Minnesota Not Nice! State’s Role in Violating Human Rights at the U.S. Southern Border and in Palestine

by Lucia Wilkes Smith

FOCUS ON DIVESTMENT

We only need to dig through a few facts and figures to learn that the U.S. military is the earth’s number one institutional environmental polluter. Meanwhile, corporations – and, therefore, most Americans – profit in very subtle ways from the development, manufacture and use of military equipment, weapons, and technology.

The word “profit” usually brings to mind the shareholders and wealthy executives of large corporations. But, really, most of us benefit from living in a wealthy nation. It’s usually a bit abstract to envision. To maintain some semblance of sanity, most of us who take action with the hope of bringing justice and peace in the larger world will focus on smaller, seemingly manageable projects and goals. And, sometimes we find shocking connections and smash-ups.

Who would imagine that my participation with the Middle East Committee of Women Against Military Madness (WAMM) would collide with my usual Tuesday morning practice of standing at a vigil outside the ICE Immigration Court, Bishop Henry Whipple Building, at Fort Snelling in Minnesota? Here, at the vigil, we gather in solidarity with those who are transported through the gates, between 7:30 and 8:30 a.m., in the vans, with ominously-tinted windows, of county sheriff departments as they enter the federal property where the destiny of the migrants will be determined. We cannot see the people inside the vans who are headed toward the courtroom, but we call out to them so they might understand we know of their plight. Although our presence may be symbolic, we intend that they not feel absolutely isolated. We hold colorful signs to educate the commuters who park their cars and rush to the nearby light rail station.

Who would suspect that the U.S. abuse and mistreatment of Latin American migrants seeking asylum or shelter at our southern border would be related to Israeli military repression and violence against Palestinians?

But, Minnesota is so far away from those other places, right?

No! Even here, in Minnesota, we are implicated. Strange, but true, I personally am implicated in the violation of human rights at our southern U.S. border and in the Palestinian Territories because I receive a pension as a retired public school teacher. All of us are implicated because the state of Minnesota includes holdings in a specific corporation, Elbit Systems Ltd.

The Minnesota State Board of Investment (SBI) is the state agency responsible for the management of the state’s various retirement funds, trust funds, and cash accounts. On March 31, 2019, the market value of all assets was $95.7 billion. So, you see, it’s big. The Board is composed of our Governor, Attorney General, Auditor, and Secretary of State. These elected officials meet in St. Paul, Minnesota, to make decisions about the investments benefiting all public employees plus those who qualify in a “non-retirement fund for trusts and other participating entities.” In addition to the Elbit holdings, the SBI is being challenged by Minnesotans calling for divestment from tobacco companies, corporations proposing copper-nickel mining in northern Minnesota, and the oil pipeline operator Enbridge, per reports during early August in the StarTribune.

Elbit Systems manufactures killer drones, weapons systems, ammunition, and military surveillance technologies, including those used on the U.S. border with Mexico. The headquarters of Elbit is located in Haifa, Israel, but there are tentacles, or rather a network of more than 80 subsidiaries and affiliates, in the U.S. and many other countries around the world employing more than 12,700 people.

Elbit currently is involved in a project of the Israeli Ministry of Defense to construct an extra hi-tech barrier around the Palestinian Gaza Strip. And, based on Elbit’s experience with walls, weapons, and surveillance in Gaza and the Occupied West Bank, the Trump administration has awarded Elbit work on the expansion of the U.S. border wall. Most recently, Elbit’s U.S. subsidiary won a $145 million contract from the U.S. Department of Homeland Security to develop surveillance towers on Arizona’s border with Mexico.

The CEO of Elbit Systems has said that the company’s current growth can be attributed to increased U.S. border spending.

Through the Middle East Committee of WAMM and another group called Minnesota Break the Bonds, I’ve learned about a handful of Israeli weapons manufacturers in which the state of Minnesota holds stock. But, Elbit is the singular corporation with a unique link to the U.S. border wall.

All of this information brings to mind the word “divestment,” and I’m remembering the anti-apartheid movement that successfully called upon U.S. institutions, decades ago, to divest from holdings in South Africa. In the case of Elbit Systems, the international community provides us with models for action. This decade has seen divestment from Elbit Systems by the Norwegian State Pension Fund, Danske Bank (largest bank in Denmark), Swedish National Pension Fund, Dutch Pension Fund, and Deutsche Bank.

In Minnesota, several local organizations – including the Minnesota Immigrant Rights Action Committee (MIRAC) – an organization that WAMM works with in coalition are adamant in requesting that the SBI divest from Elbit because of human rights violations attributed to that corporation with the expansion of surveillance at the U.S. southern border wall.

We Minnesotans continue to profit from pain, injustice and tragedy. Until such divestment is complete, we, as Minnesotans, continue to be uniquely implicated in this humanitarian catastrophe.

Announcing Dear Descendent:
a new collection of poetry by activist Carol Masters, a member of the WAMM Newsletter Committee.

In Dear Descendent, Carol Masters draws upon her life as an activist and her love of the natural world to fashion thoughtful overlays and wry juxtapositions that can delight the senses or prick the conscience – often both at once. A master of metaphor, yet she doesn’t shy away from an occasional grand (and whimsical) metaphysical statement: Everything is Made of Everything. There are prison cells and fields of flowers – even her straightforward descriptions of the moon demonstrate that something new and evocative can still be found in its age-old countenance. Gratitude and grief commingle in her poems about aging and loved ones lost. Topping it all off is an intermittently surreal and sometimes almost crazy freedom in the use of images. In the poem “Fly Ball,” for example, sports, physics, and the Second Coming converge as the sacrifice fly approaches the mitt. (Apollinaire would have approved.) The words flow freely, musically, from the page, ensuring that Masters’ voice is one that her descendants – and ours – will want to listen to.

More about Carol Masters: She grew up in Chicago and has lived and worked in Kansas, Texas, and Minnesota. Her children and friends inspired her to actions for peace (with the Honeywell Project and Women Against Military Madness), and in environmental movements. She served useful time in jail after being arrested for civil disobedience in nonviolent protests of nuclear weapons. A number of the poems in this collection, including “jail poems,” reflect her social conscience concerns. Masters is a recipient of a Loft Mentor Series Award, Loft-McKnight fellowship, Minnesota State Arts Board fellowship, and Minnesota Voices Project award for The Peace Terrorist (short stories) (New Rivers Press, 1993). Her biography You Can’t Do That: Marv Davidov, Nonviolent Revolutionary was published by Nodin Press in 2009, and was selected as a finalist for a Midwest Independent Publishers Award. 📚
Waging Peace Counters the Indoctrination of Youth:
Vigil Outside Camp Ripley

by Doug Olson

Focusing on Militarism

Brainerd Area Coalition for Peace (BACP) and allies, Women Against Military Madness (WAMM) and Veterans for Peace (VFP) are holding a peace vigil during Camp Ripley’s Open House Day in September to challenge the pro-war indoctrination of youth. Camp Ripley’s Open House Day is, in the words of BACP member Robin Hensel, “a recruitment and retention event.” The National Guard training facility, located in Little Falls, Minnesota, is one of the largest such facilities in the nation. Camp Ripley encourages children to eventually join the military when they turn 18 by giving them rides at an early age on tanks, Humvees, and helicopters. National Guardsmen have even instructed young children on how to fire machine guns (They don’t use real bullets, but they simulate the action).*

But Camp Ripley’s indoctrination of youth isn’t limited to Open House Day. Camp Ripley encourages young people to visit the Minnesota Military Museum, located at Camp Ripley. During a 2013 field trip, children were allowed to climb tanks. The Little Falls Dairy Queen and Boy Scout Troop 51 co-hosted the trip.¹

The peace vigil outside Camp Ripley’s Main Gate during Open House Day counters Camp Ripley’s pro-war propaganda by sharing our message of peace with visitors entering and leaving Camp Ripley. The vigil is held for the entirety of Open House Day so that as many Camp Ripley visitors as possible see the vigil. Vigil participants interact with visitors and National Guard soldiers. Peace vigil participants talk about the real harm war does to civilians, soldiers, the environment, and entire nations.

The Camp Ripley peace vigils have become a tradition for BACP and our allies in WAMM and VFP since 2012. While the 2012, 2013, and 2015 vigils received a hostile reception, the 2017 vigil received a mixed reception. A majority of passing motorists berated vigil participants, but a substantial minority, including a handful of National Guardsmen, offered their support for the vigil by honking their horns, giving thumbs up, and making peace signs. Hopefully, the 2019 vigil will receive even more support as Americans grow increasingly weary of never-ending U.S. wars in the Middle East and Afghanistan. ✝

Teens Targeted Too!
Camp Ripley was also the location last May of the Marine’s Minneapolis Regional Office’s Mini Boot Camp. Teenagers from all over the state of Minnesota were bused to Camp Ripley to experience what it’s like to train as a Marine. The camp is predictably not designed to encourage independent and critical thinking in youth, but rather absolute adherence to authority. A gunnery sergeant who trained the teens described it in a local newspaper, the Morrison County Record (emphasis WAMM’s) “Overall our initial reason is to establish dominance and set a standard immediately. We expect the best and will not allow them to deviate from that at all.”
