

Resource Guide for Funders

Sustainable Food Systems Organizations
Led by People of Color and Indigenous Communities

FUNDED BY:  Mitsubishi Corporation

JULY 2019

Preface

Food is a basic need. It provides sustenance and nutrients that enable us to move and grow, and when food is healthy it contributes to our wellness. The American Planning Association defines a sustainable food system as one that is health-promoting, sustainable, resilient, diverse in size and scale, economically balanced, transparent, and supports fair and just communities and conditions for farmworkers. A food system has been in place since humans began hunting and gathering, but unfortunately over time our food system has become one overrun with machinery, poor husbandry practices, and environmentally unsound growing methods. However, many organizations across the country are moving toward creating sustainable food systems (SFS) to improve food quality and, at the same time, revive the soil and water sources required to grow our food.

The purpose of this guide is to provide answers to commonly asked questions by Grantmakers in their attempt to better understand the SFS landscape, particularly the organizations within that are led by people of color and Indigenous communities. With this guide, funders will be better equipped with real-time knowledge about these organizations and can, in turn, use this information to inform and advance their internal grantmaking practices.

Ultimately, the desired impact of this guide is increased funding to people of color and Indigenous communities in SFS – a sector that has been consistently under-invested in and poorly resourced for decades. According to 2013 data, only 6.9% of all grants go toward communities of color (D5 Coalition). We hope this guide will stimulate conversation among funders about supporting SFS organizations led by people of color and Indigenous communities, which often have fairly small budgets, low capacity, and are governed in ways that are different from the more “mainstream” organizations that funders typically support. At the same time, these organizations benefit their communities because many of the groups directly serve their surrounding communities. We intend for this guide to spark conversation within foundations about their current giving to organizations led by people of color and encourage program staff to reach out to their peers to learn more about what they may be doing to diversify their grantee pool addressing SFS issues.

This guide lists organizations alphabetically with indexes in the back that categorize the organizations by region and areas of focus to help with ease in searching. Please contact the organizations directly for the most up-to-date information on their program areas and activities.

We would like to thank Mitsubishi Corporation for its generous support in creating this guide. We also thank the Institute for Strategic and Equitable Development for its partnership in this endeavor. Lastly, we thank the member foundations of the InDEEP Initiative for their continued commitment to building a healthier environment and sustainable food systems.

We hope you find this guide helpful in your efforts to support organizations led by people of color and Indigenous people to continue doing the important work of creating a food system that is equitable, sustainable, and healthy for all.

Things you wanted to know about grantmaking with a racial equity lens but were afraid to ask.

- 1. How do I make “the case” within my organization for more racially equitable and socially just grantmaking? Looking through a racial equity lens allows a grantmaking organization to see where the disparities lie between races, and thus understand how these existing racial disparities are standing in the way of the funding organization reaching its goals. In making the case, one needs to examine how the grantmaking organization’s work needs to address these disparities and the systems behind them. In doing so, funding can be directed to break down these systems and can result in not only meeting the organization’s goals, but benefit all people (see “The Curb Cut Effect”).
- 2. What approaches have other organizations used to make room for new grantees in their portfolios? One way is to open a two-part proposal process that first funds a planning grant then makes grantees eligible for a larger, multi-year grant. The planning grant will give a new organization time to get familiar with the funder’s processes and requirements, while the funder can assess the organization’s capacity to take on a larger initiative. However, make it clear up-front that receiving a planning grant does not guarantee the next round of funding. In the end, whether receiving a larger grant or not, the organization is able to build some capacity to prepare for other philanthropic investments.
- 3. How do we identify and source new grantee organizations? Using a guide such as this is a start. Organizations have been listed by category and geographic region to make it easier for searches. In addition, looking to funder affinity groups like Sustainable Agriculture and Food Systems Funders will bring you into funding networks that work with organizations new to yours.
- 4. What, if any, different considerations do I need to take into account for organizations that traditionally do not receive foundation grants for their work? Organizations such as these may not have the structure in place to apply for and manage a grant. While they may have the capacity to accept your funding they may not have the capacity for the tracking and reporting requirements that come with formal grants. As a result, you may want to consider an easier application form for smaller organizations and a more minimal reporting format. This may also mean setting aside a small pool of funding specific to these types of funding initiatives so a uniform simplified application and reporting process is applied to all such organizations.
- 5. How can I partner with other funders to build the pipeline of organizations led by people of communities of color and Indigenous communities? Joining funder affinity groups, such as SAFSF, Native Americans in Philanthropy, Association of Black Foundation Executives, and Asian Americans in Philanthropy, would be a great way to begin learning from and partnering with other funders who have more experience working with smaller organizations not accustomed to grants. These organizations also can assist funders in understanding how to apply a racial equity lens to their grantmaking. Finally, attending the Change Philanthropy conference is another way to learn about issues of racial equity and meet funders working with organizations led by people of color and Indigenous communities.

BLACK MESA WATER COALITION

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

This organization is dedicated to preserving and protecting Mother Earth and the integrity of Indigenous Peoples' cultures, with the vision of building sustainable and healthy communities. While starting off small, the organization has grown into a well-established nonprofit that utilizes proactive strategies, such as green economic development. It is a leader in energy justice issues in the Southwest and around the country. True to its root, the group's work is focused on the Black Mesa region, but because of the region's role as a linchpin for the energy infrastructure of the southwest, the potential impacts of BMWC's work spans across the Navajo Nation, the southwest, and the country.

CAPI USA

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

While historically known as a social service agency, CAPI has integrated social justice priorities into its work in order to ensure lasting improvements in the lives of its participants. The group serves more than 4,000 low-income immigrants, refugees, and people of color living primarily in Hennepin County. Approximately 65% are Asian, 22% are African, 8% are African-American, 3% are other immigrants, and 2% are Caucasian. Over 95% of the people CAPI USA serves are living at or below the federally designated poverty level.

The organization's approach is based on an equality and asset-based framework. CAPI believes that to effectively guide refugees and immigrants on their journey toward self-determination and social equity, it must utilize communal voices.

GREEN GARDEN BAKERY

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

The Green Garden Bakery business and youth leadership program is comprised of young entrepreneurs from Heritage Park – North Minneapolis who are driven by a passion of changing the world one healthy and delicious baked good at a time. Currently supported by the not-for-profit organization Urban Strategies Inc., Green Garden Bakery’s goal is to support the leadership development, community engagement, and economic mobility of youth in Heritage Park.

Green Garden Bakery grows vegetables in its community garden, bakes them into healthy vegetable-based desserts for every diet (vegan, gluten free, sugar free), and markets them using sustainable practices. The youth then sell the desserts for “pay-what-you-want” and donate the proceeds back into their community.

Typically, teens in North Minneapolis and youth of color in general have limited opportunities to be exposed to corporate experiences. This program allows area youth an opportunity to fill their resumes with business-related and other specialized skills, as well as give back to their community. The organization has purchased security systems for families in need, sponsored adult exercises classes, and provided meals for families in need. Additionally, Green Garden Bakery promotes healthy food habits in creative ways and allows customers to consume a product that has much more value.

Indigenous ReGeneration

INDIGENOUS REGENERATION

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

Indigenous Regeneration was launched in early 2017 by Lacey & Paul Cannon and utilizes their network of philanthropists, community partners, Indigenous rights activists, and musicians to bring programming and resources to Tribal Communities in San Diego. The group believes emotional and physical wellbeing is achievable through reconnection to the land, self, and others.

The organization's programming is focused on: traditional and contemporary food cultivation; environmental awareness and re-connection to the land; traditional plant education and integration; Indigenous primitive survival skills; healthy self-expression through music, art, and cultural activities; regenerative agriculture concepts; and sustainable building techniques for future economic growth on San Diego reservations. All of its programming is designed from an Indigenous view, overseen by elders on the board, and is aligned with holistic practices for modern benefits.

LA SEMILLA

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

La Semilla features several programs, including a community farm, classroom education, and relationship building between farmers and markets.

Its community farm is an education and demonstration farm guided by agro-ecology and permaculture principles. The farm serves as a public gathering space using food, fun, and spirit to build community. Its Edible Education program empowers students to understand how food is grown, consumed, and impacts personal, community, and environmental health. The education materials are based on the idea that the health of the community and future generations can be improved through hands-on experiences growing and cooking fruits and vegetables. Its Farm Fresh program connects farmers to local farmers markets, restaurants, stores, and institutions. The organization helps build those relationships that establish common grounding in the challenges and opportunities for direct market expansion while providing informed market analysis.

NATIONAL BLACK FARMERS ASSOCIATION

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

Since its inception in 1995 by John W. Boyd, Jr. a fourth-generation black farmer from Baskerville, Virginia near the town of South Hill, Virginia, the National Black Farmers Association (NBFA) has been a national voice on the issue of farm subsidies, arguing that black farmers are left out of the massive system of subsidies provided by the government. A 2007 report by Environmental Working Group found a widening gap between subsidies provided to white farmers and those provided to black farmers.

TRULY LIVING WELL

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

Since its inception in 2006, Truly Living Well Center for Natural Urban Agriculture (TLW) has used its expertise to demonstrate how food can be a bridge across diverse cultures, backgrounds, and experiences. The organization's goal is to use natural and organic food production as the plate on which it creates a culture of health and wellness in its community.

The nonprofit's programs and activities provide agriculture training, nutrition education, and outreach. Also, TLW is helping to develop a local sustainable food economy by producing high quality, naturally grown herbs, fruits and vegetables, and creating meaningful employment. From its East Point Farm and Collegetown Farm in Atlanta's Westside, TLW is providing a dependable, consistent source of fresh produce, particularly for those who cannot afford to purchase it otherwise. Both farm sites include holistic spaces where young and old may gather for community, wellness, and healing.

TLW is committed to bringing good food, good health, and well-being to Atlanta's urban centers and modeling a healthy local food economy for all.

YOUTH FOOD JUSTICE NETWORK

ORGANIZATION SPOTLIGHT

The Youth Food Justice Network, or YFJN, was established in the spring of 2014 following expressed needs from youth organizations doing food justice work to unite as an integral part of the larger food justice movement. From the beginning, the work of the YFJN has been to establish a platform to connect and celebrate youth food justice organizations working to demand a better and just food system for all.

The YFJN was created with the mission to build a shared learning space for youth organizations involved in the food movement. Its primary goals include: connect and build solidarity with other youth/youth organizations in the northeast region; inspire youth leadership by presenting youth-led workshops and skill-shares; collaborate and brainstorm solutions to some of the region's most difficult food system issues; and build a Regional Youth Food Justice Network for all youth organizations invested in the food justice movement.
