"South City Revival" [The EP] is a taste of what one of the hardest working and most talented bands in Chicago is capable of and while it is a relief to finally be able to hear these songs at home - you need to see South City Revival play live!

-Backline Staff

Musicians Joe Pacelli (vocals, guitar), John Quinn (guitar), Mike Fitzgerald (bass), Jose Perez (drums), and Brendan Linnane (pedal steel) met in the parking lot of a Western avenue bar and decided they wanted to write songs like Townes Van Zandt and play shows like Bruce Springsteen. They asked each other "what does Chicago country sound like?"—a question that has shaped the sound and aesthetic of South City Revival since its formation. Combining elements of country, rock, and rhythm and blues, the band writes songs that are powerful and sure to make people dance.

With the release of their self-titled, debut EP in August of 2017, South City Revival has quickly garnered attention from media outlet's such as The Chicago Tribune/Daily Southtown & Southern Rock Brasil, and was included on 93.1 WXRT's Local Anesthetic playlist. The bands' song "It's Alright" was also added to nationally renowned Texas music blog Saving Country Music's Top 25 Spotify Playlist (Update #8).
