October 29, 2020 (Dublin, Ireland)—The Specialty Coffee Association (SCA) has released the first episode of a new podcast dedicated to the World Coffee Championships. Across six weekly episodes, the World Coffee Championships Podcast (WCC Podcast) will offer a glimpse behind the scenes of the different World Coffee Championships, bringing to light some of the hidden stories woven in and around these annual skill-based competitions that serve as the culmination of local and regional events around the globe.

This first series of episodes is the culmination of a year’s work exploring the history, impact, and evolution of the competitions through interviews with members of the large network of volunteers who make the annual events possible. The release of the series marks the first time the SCA produced a narrative, story-driven podcast, anchored by voices of the specialty coffee community.

Listeners are guided through each episode by a rotating cast of coffee competition expert co-hosts who have been a part of the World Coffee Championships across local, national, and international events who join the podcast’s producer, James Harper of Filter Stories: Sara Al-Ali, Rie Moustakis, Anna Oleksak, Roukiat Delrue, Kimberly Yer, Sonja Bjork Grant, and Gloria Pedroza. The series also features interviews with 27 different members of the specialty coffee’s competition community, representing various roles and perspectives across the World Barista Championship, World Latte Art Championship, World Brewers Cup, World Coffee Roasting Championship, World Coffee in Good Spirits Championship, World Cup Tasters Championship, and the Cezve/Ibrik Championship.

“The World Coffee Championships have been around for nearly 20 years, engaging thousands of coffee professionals and enthusiasts worldwide every year in local and international events—and it’s these people, and their stories, that make these competitions so interesting and exciting to be a part of, year after year,” said SCA Editor Jenn Rugolo. “This project was long in the making before COVID-19 arrived and canceled this year’s events, so it feels particularly special to be able to share this with our community around the time we’d otherwise be getting ready to gather in Melbourne. We hope you have as much fun listening to this collection of stories as we had researching and creating it.”

Each new episode of the WCC Podcast will publish weekly across November and into early December on the SCA Podcast channel and SCA News. This series of the WCC Podcast is made possible with support from our series sponsor, Victoria Arduino, and our episode sponsors: DaVinci Gourmet, URNEX, Scotsman, Loumidis Papagalos, and Licor43.
