Company History and Timeline
Keysight Technologies' legacy includes the original Hewlett-Packard business founded in 1939 by Bill Hewlett and Dave Packard, which spun off with Agilent Technologies in 1999. On Sept. 19, 2013, Agilent announced plans to separate into two publicly traded companies through a tax-free spinoff of its electronic measurement business. The new company, Keysight Technologies, began trading on the NYSE under the symbol KEYS on November 3, 2014.

Diversity is an integral part of our core values. They reflect the importance we place on diversity, inclusion, and the unique perspectives and contributions of every employee. As a global company, our employees interact with peers around the world. We strive to maintain a best-in-class work environment that fosters respect for individuals, their ideas and contributions because we know that diversity is truly a competitive advantage and helps drive innovation. We benefit from the innovation that results when people with differing experiences, perspectives and cultures work together. A diverse work force expands the company’s base of knowledge, skills and understanding. It also helps Keysight to be more responsive to the needs of its customers.
