MEEA Continues to Grow

MEEA is having a good and productive year. We have had two successful conferences in San Diego and Byblos. Also, the design of a very promising program for the upcoming meeting in January 2005 in Philadelphia has just been completed. In addition, membership in MEEA has markedly increased this year and the quantity and quality of paper submissions for conferences are on the rise. Finally, we have managed to establish a "merchant account" to accept dues and submission fees via credit card. This should greatly facilitate our transactions for membership and conference arrangements in the coming years.

The San Diego conference, MEEA 24th Annual Meeting, was held in conjunction with the ASSA meetings Jan 3-5, 2004. The location was, of course, spectacular and treated all attendees to beautiful sunny weather and scenery. As usual, the conference was kicked off by our popular "Poster Session." This was followed by a special session jointly with the International Society for the New Institutional Economics (ISNIE) on Institutions and Development, and others on Business Cycles, FDI and Trade, Capital and Labor Markets and another popular roundtable on the Challenges of Globalization in the MENA region. The MEEA Business meeting featured the presentation of plaques for the outgoing officers (Mine Cinar and Bulent Uyar) and the announcement that Rania Al-Mashat was the winner of the Ibn Khaldun Prize.

The meeting in Byblos, Lebanon, was the Third International Conference of MEEA. It was held during May 27-28 in collaboration with the Lebanese American University’s School of Business, which was simultaneously holding its Sixth International Conference on the Economics and Finance of the Middle East and North Africa. The conference consisted of panels on Political Economy, Banking and Financial Markets, the Economy of Palestine, Integration, Infrastructure and Regulation, FDI and Exchange Rates and the Economics of North Africa. As usual for the conferences in Byblos, the hospitality was warm and the conference highlighted by an interesting public policy session featuring distinguished officials from the Central Bank, the Arab Banks Association and leading bankers.

For the upcoming 25th Annual Meeting, we had sixty abstract submissions. Given that we have six 2-hour sessions at the meetings—one poster session and five regular ones—the number of papers that we can accept are limited. As a result, the Program Committee had to be very selective to ensure the best quality and match among papers being presented. The poster session helped mitigate the problem somewhat by allowing us to offer an opportunity for presentation in case of many good quality papers that could not be included in the regular sessions. But, even in that case, the available space imposes strict limitations and we had to turn down many potentially good papers.

I would like to end by noting that poster sessions have proven a very effective means of communicating research results in our annual meetings for two reasons. The first is, of course, the fact that poster sessions allow us to accommodate many more papers than the numbers feasible in our regular sessions. The second reason is an interesting feature that differentiates poster sessions from the regular ones: The papers presented in poster sessions have to compete over audience, rather than enjoying a kind of "captive audience" for 15-30 minutes. As a result of this, I expect the poster session presentations to become much more effective and attractive as the authors and the audience become more familiar with the poster system. Of course, traditional sessions have their own values and we will maintain as many of them as possible within ASSA framework.

Details on past conferences are available on the MEEA website (meeaweb.org). The program of the 25th Annual Meeting will appear on the website soon after it has been approved by the ASSA.

I look forward to continued progress of MEEA in facilitating high quality research in the coming years.
