MEEA’s Activities Continue to Expand

MEEA continues to expand its activities and membership. Our official mailing list is creeping up to 1000 with an unusually large increase in the number of dues-paying members in this particular year; the issuance of the newsletter has become semi-annual instead of only annual and has significant coverage of important publication of relevance to the MENA region; the MEEA website (meeaweb.org) has an increasing number of announcements about conferences and research and training activities; the most recent volume (volume 5) of the online journal Topics in Middle Eastern and North African Economies has just been published; volume 5 in Research in Middle East Economics (on Food and Agriculture in the MENA Region) has already been published and distributed; the annual conferences of MEEA at the ASSA meetings are being better attended with increasing competition to get on the program than ever before; the second international conference of MEEA has just been very successfully concluded in collaboration with the Centre of Economics and Ethics for Environment and Development at the University of Versailles, and plans for the third one, the first to be held in the MENA Region itself (at the Lebanese American University (LAU) in Byblos, Lebanon) are in the final stages of preparation. A publication resulting from the first conference is about to appear and one for the second conference is being planned. MENA-related sessions have been set up at two of the Western Economic Association summer conferences; key MEEA officers are engaging in and attempting to coordinate with other conferences and groups around the world; several MEEA members have been awarded the Ibn Khaldun prize for best papers submitted to MEEA conferences by young researchers.

MEEA-University of Versailles-Saint Quentin en Yvelines Joint International Conference, June 2003

Despite the worries of war, SARS and strikes, MEEA’s Second Joint International Conference hosted by Jacques Charmes at the University of Versailles-Saint Quentin en Yvelines in June 2003 was a rousing success.

The conference was attended by 60 persons, 31 coming from outside of France, 17 from the University of Versailles and 12 from other universities in France. 19 of the participants were young PhD or post/doc students, and 25 (41.7%) were women, and 25 were English speaking. 8 MENA countries were represented, 4 European, as well as the USA and other countries. 31 papers were presented and 4 more were circulated in the absence of their authors who could not attend.

The organizers of the conference are preparing a CD-ROM that will include all papers to be sent to all participants. For those who were not able to attend, the organizers are currently preparing to publish the conference proceedings. Details of this publication will be included in a future MEEA newsletter.

MEEA would like to thank all those who participated in the conference, but most of all thank Professor Charmes for all of his hard work to make this conference a success. We hope all those who were not able to participate can plan to be in Byblos Lebanon in May of 2004 for our Third Joint International Conference hosted by Lebanese American University, Byblos.
Recent Journal Articles

As part of the information services to MEEA members, the Newsletter will list recent academic journal articles on the economics of the Middle East. Authors who would like their articles to be listed or abstracted are encouraged to send them directly to the editor. Preference is given to articles from journals that are indexed by the Journal of Economic Literature.

more than five years beyond receiving the PhD. Please note that we encourage you young scholars to apply for this prize if you have presented a paper in the Versailles summer session or if you are scheduled to present one in San Diego (or last year in Washington).

The Association now has a better-managed, more transparent budget than ever before; MEEA's Board has been expanded to include additional members from outside North America, and progress is being made on MEEA's ability to receive payment of dues and fees via credit card. The first chapter of the organization has been established abroad. I would like to take this opportunity to thank some of the key people responsible for these successes, in particular, Mine Cinar as President of MEEA for the last four years and as editor of Topics in Middle Eastern and North African Economies, Bulent Uyar for his most conscientious work as Treasurer, Ward Sayre for his fine leadership in putting together and distributing the newsletter, Jennifer Olmsted as the current Series Editor of RMEE, Hassan Hakimian and Jacques Charmes for their excellent work in organizing the first two international conferences, Wassim Shahin, Salpie Djoundourian and their colleagues at LAU for their activities in setting up the chapter and organizing the third international conference of MEEA, and for initiating the new English language journal Review of Middle East Economics and Finance (MEEF), and all the current and recent past Board members who helped in so many of these activities in different ways, and last but not least the many MEEA members who have presented excellent papers and served as discussants at our recent conferences.
