Because the Harvest Should be Shared

People are at the heart of our mission to strengthen community food systems. In fact, what makes our food systems work revolutionary is that we put the needs of people - farmers and their families, food workers, cooks, drivers, and everyone else along the food chain, including those who eat - first.

Every day, the Intervale Center creates new markets for farmers through research, collaboration, and a bustling retail business, the Intervale Food Hub. We open our doors and land to thousands of volunteers and visitors, share the harvest with people experiencing hunger, and organize community events like Summervale and Wintervale that celebrate the goodness of Vermont-grown food, music and fun. We succeed when we create meaningful, joyful, and dignified experiences across all participants in the local food economy, believing that good food can change the world.
INTERVERALE FOOD HUB

In 2007, the Intervale Food Hub started as a question: What if farmers could spend less time marketing food and more time farming, while still earning a fair price? Today, the Intervale Food Hub has grown into a year-round, direct retail online business with more than 40 farmers and food makers. We deliver Vermont’s best foods to people directly, serve businesses like UVM Sodexo, and support the Vermont Foodbank’s Vermonters Feeding Vermonters Program, connecting our producers to wholesale and retail markets while helping more Vermonters access the incredible food that is grown right here.

DEALER.COM & GLEANING

In 2019, Dealer.com donated a pick-up truck to our Gleaning and Food Rescue Program. Painted by the talented Vermont artist, Mary Lacy, the truck is a real celebration of fresh food, local partnerships, and a literal vehicle for sustainably serving members of our community who are in need. Hannah Baxter, Gleaning and Food Rescue Manager, says, "With our own vehicle, we are able to distribute gleaned produce to more people in our community and better serve our partner farms."

LEARN MORE AT INTERVALE.ORG