To manage migraine disease, patients sometimes need to combine multiple medicines such as:

- Preventive medication to stop migraine attacks before they start
- Pain medication to cope during attacks
- Anti-Inflammatory drugs to help end a migraine attack

Known as “combination therapy,” the approach has been common in migraine treatment for years.

But now health plans want to limit combination therapy to protect their own bottom lines...

...leaving patients with yet another struggle.

Migraine disease + health plan interference is not a good combination for patients.