What is the Prison Rape Elimination Act (PREA)?

The Prison Rape Elimination Act, also known as “PREA,” is a law passed in 2003 to address the widespread problem of sexual violence in prisons. It applies to all detention facilities, including jails, private facilities, prison lockups, and immigration detention centers. PREA required the development of national standards on how to prevent prison rape, and it requires all facilities to adopt a zero-tolerance policy towards sexual assault.

PREA does not create a right of action. This means that if your facility violates PREA, it does not automatically mean they violated the law or make them legally responsible. You cannot bring a lawsuit just because a facility has violated PREA. PREA is a set of guidelines facilities must follow in order to receive federal funding. PREA reports are generally referred to state law enforcement, but filing a PREA report does not automatically mean that criminal charges will be brought.

However, PREA does create certain protections and ways for you to seek help.

PREA requires institutions to:

- Provide access to PREA reporting options, including anonymous reporting and third-party reporting through a hotline
- Maintain camera coverage throughout the facility
- Screen incarcerated people for risk of abusing others or for risk of being abused
- Hire, train, and use staff in a way that prevents and responds effectively to sexual violence
- Prevent juveniles from being housed with adults
- Prevent retaliation against individuals who report, or attempt to report, sexual violence or fear of sexual abuse
- Provide additional protections to transgender people
- Inform incarcerated people of PREA policies and reporting procedures
- Designate and keep a PREA coordinator
- Provide survivors with medical and mental health care
- Provide access to victim advocates
- Provide free forensic rape exams to people who wish to undergo this process
- Fully investigate claims of sexual abuse following evidence protocols
- Prevent opposite gender pat searches and opposite gender guards entering housing units unannounced

What to do if you think PREA has been violated:

- Call the PREA Hotline:

  PREA Hotline:
  1(800) 472-8477

  For most Pennsylvania prisons and jails

  GEO Group PREA Hotline:
  (561) 999-5927

  For George W. Hill Correctional Facility
What to do if you think PREA has been violated (continued):

- Speak directly to the PREA Coordinator at your facility.

- Report the incident to a staff member. Check the inmate handbook at your institution to see if there are specific procedures for reporting sexual abuse or harassment. You may also be able to file a grievance through your institution's administrative remedy process.

- For individuals incarcerated in a Pennsylvania Department of Corrections state facility, you can send a written report to the DOC PREA Coordinator. You may file a report anonymously if you do not feel safe revealing your identity or are concerned about retaliation.* Send a written report to:

  PREA Coordinator
  Office of State Inspector General
  555 Walnut Street, 8th Floor
  Harrisburg, PA 17101

- For individuals incarcerated the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) facility, you can send a written report out of the facility.* Include the dates, times, and locations where each incident took place, along with the names of those who were involved. Send a written report to:

  If the person involved is incarcerated:
  National PREA Coordinator
  400 First Street, N.W., Room 4027
  Washington, D.C. 20534
  If the person involved is staff:
  Office of Internal Affairs
  320 First Street, N.W., Room 600
  Washington, D.C. 20534

*Note that even though you are using a reporting option outside the facility, this information will likely be routed back to the facility for an investigation. Calls to these numbers will also be recorded by your facility under its usual policies.

What should you do if your institution is placing you at risk, not taking your concerns seriously, or not allowing you access to PREA reporting?
