RENOVATIONS BEGIN ON NEW BREWERY AT 925 W 8TH AVENUE

DENVER, CO (January 6, 2017) — Renovations are underway at the site of Sojourner's Brewing Project, LLC's future brewery at 925 W 8th Ave. in Denver's Art District on Santa Fe.

"We're so excited to get to this point. It's been a long time trying to realize this dream, and this groundbreaking is an important step," said founder and brewer Andrew Moore.

The company retained local architect William Wood to design the new space, which recently underwent an interior demolition, leaving only the shell. Wood has recently worked on local breweries including Little Machine Beer, Seedstock Brewery, the upcoming Zuni Street Brewing Company.

BUILT. Construction of Longmont is the general contractor, which worked on Copper Kettle Brewing, is just completing Backstage Coffee, and also has an upcoming cold-storage project with Left Hand Brewing.

The approximately 2,200-square foot building will house the production facility in approximately half of the available space and the 58-capacity taproom in the other half. A patio will rest out front, with a five-space parking lot facing 8th Ave.

The brewery hopes to open its doors this spring. "Were excited to see this space materialize, and we're looking forward to giving local craft beer drinkers a nice space to try a new beer, learn, and make new friends," Moore said
