The Sámi languages are spoken in Finland, Norway, Sweden and Russia. UNESCO regards all the languages as endangered, but revitalization efforts are taking place in several of them.

The Sámi languages are spoken from the Baltic area in Sweden, in central Norway, and along the eastern shores of the Barents Sea in Russia. The ten languages are spoken in northern Sweden, Norway, and Russia. They are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family.

Languages such as Ökänd, Skolt Sámi, and Inari Sámi are spoken in Finland, while the North Sámi language is spoken in both Norway and Sweden. The South Sámi language is spoken in Norway and Sweden, and the Lule Sámi language is spoken in western parts of Sweden. The Nenets language is spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.

The Sámi languages are spoken in various regions, including coastal areas, inland areas, and even high-altitude areas. The languages are closely related to each other and are part of the Finnish-Ugric family. The Sámi languages are spoken in the Arctic region of Russia, and the Evenk language is spoken in the Ural region of Russia. The Selkup language is spoken in the Irkutsk region of Russia.