

Thomas Roma

All Aboard The Living Room

ON subway trains, people used to stare straight ahead. They were being proper, circumspect. That's changed. Now people treat the subway cars like their living rooms. You'll see people kissing. Hanging from the poles.

Here on the F train, on the way to Coney Island, they are on their way to the beach, and the party starts before they get there. People are not in suspended animation on the trains. They're living their lives there.

THOMAS ROMA

Thomas Roma's new book, "Higher Ground," features photographs he took on the elevated trains in Brooklyn.