How do high school students from the Bay Area learn some of the skills needed to help build a school in Malawi? Working on the paths in the Berkeley hills, of course. Tom Silverman, program and trek coordinator for California chapter of buildOn, a national community-service organization, has been bringing young volunteers to our path-building parties for the last two years. Tom says that learning to use the simple tools that BPWA employs — such as mattocks, sledge hammers, levels and shovels — stands these teens in good stead when they travel to underdeveloped countries to assist local villagers in constructing a school.

In February, 18 energetic, motivated high school students from Berkeley and Oakland fanned out over a steep hillside in North Berkeley as Charlie Bowen, BPWA path-building leader, showed them how to lay a wooden step onto a solid bed that rain would not wash out. Steve Glaeser, Charlie’s able assistant, demonstrated how to use a big sledgehammer to drive rebar through each step and into the ground. The vital importance of tool safety was continually stressed. The young volunteers were working hard but wore big smiles. Their hundreds of after-school and weekend service hours would soon be put to the test during a two-week stay in Malawi, and they were talking excitedly about the upcoming trip.

Ashley Shult, a three-year buildOn leader, and Tom Silverman travel with two students from each of twenty Northern California public high schools, who then stay with local families. Ashley says that she loves working with teenagers, noting that when they are really engaged in a project, they become inspired to work even harder. Once they have demonstrated their dedication, they can apply for an all-expense-paid buildOn trip. Nicaragua is on the schedule for another group of students this summer.

New Friends for Oakland Pedestrians: Meet Oakland Urban Paths — Paul Rosenbloom

Oakland has several hundred pedestrian paths and stairways, mostly in the city's hillier neighborhoods. Until recently, no one group has tried to identify them all and promote their use and maintenance. Now a new volunteer organization, Oakland Urban Paths, has taken on these challenges. We asked one of the founders, Paul Rosenbloom, to write about the new group and its goals:

Topography in urban areas creates a need for many types of access. It's no surprise that stairs and pedestrian paths are sprinkled across the city, weaving together Oakland's communities and history. While affording some mystery and adding charm and character to neighborhoods, these paths and stairways are a functional part of Oakland's urban landscape. They provide pedestrian connections between residential and commercial areas and also allow passage in emergencies.

The pathway network has a historical basis. Much of it was developed in tandem with the Key Line trolley system, the brainchild of one of Oakland's early entrepreneurs, “Borax” Smith. The network still connects to many AC Transit routes throughout Oakland, from Adams Point and Rockridge to Montclair, Glenview, and many other districts. The paths are depicted in the Walk Oakland! map, available at many book stores, bike shops and sporting good stores.

Oakland Urban Paths (OUP) was formed in 2009 to explore Oakland's unique bounty of pedestrian resources. We look forward to promoting neighborhood-based stewardship through a variety of activities and events, similar to those conducted by the Berkeley Path Wanderers.

Oakland Urban Paths is composed of committed citizens who want to make Oakland a more walkable city. However, our city is vast and our task ambitious. We recognize that the most passionate and committed advocates for the work of OUP will be the neighbors living near the stairs. Many of our interactions with stair neighbors have revealed a strong interest in the stairs and a persistent question: “How can I help maintain these stairs?” Our coming efforts will be designed to answer this question. The Friends of the Cleveland Cascades (clevelandcascades.org) is a successful example of a local group that has secured funding for improvements to these popular stairs on the shores of Lake Merritt, and we'd like to encourage groups like this to take root across Oakland.

BPWA Board Meetings
The BPWA Board meets on the third Thursday of each month (except Feb, Sept, and Dec) at Music Sources, 1000 The Alameda (at Marin). Observers are welcome. Please enter via the side door at 1842 Marin Ave.

For more than a decade, the Alameda County Transportation Improvement Authority (ACTIA) has given Oakland about $400,000 a year for stairs and pathways, but the city council recently approved the temporary suspension of this use of the ACTIA funding until sales tax revenues return to previous levels. For the near future, improvement of stairs and paths will rely on volunteer efforts such as those by OUP.

Before budgetary difficulties arose, plans were afoot to administer city funds for stair improvements through a flexible on-call system, rather than the former few large projects. A contractor could make many strategic improvements to stairs and pathways, such as spot patching and replacing handrails and signage. This approach could complement efforts of citizen’s groups. OUP is dedicated to staying apprised of all developments. We encourage stair and path enthusiasts to speak up in support of these urban treasures. Greater awareness and use of the stairs, increases the chances for restored funding.

BPWA to Lead Four Walks for Western Wilderness Conference

The Western Wilderness Conference, a gathering of local and national wilderness advocates, will be held on the UC Berkeley campus, April 8 - 11. The conference is sponsored by the California Wilderness Coalition and the Sierra Club, along with many other conservation proponents, including the Wilderness Society, Friends of the River, and thirty other supporting sponsors. BPWA is a promotional sponsor and has agreed to lead four walks on April 11.

• Susan Schwartz will explore Albany Hill.
• Charlie Bowen will cover some of the new paths and adjacent trails in Tilden Park.
• Sandy Friedland will tour the hilly Claremont and Grandview Hills neighborhoods (NOTE: This walk is limited to 35 participants. RSVP to keithskinner.public@gmail.com)
• Steve Glaeser will lead an easy walk to Indian Rock to watch the sunset.

The BPWA walks are free and open to the public; others are only for conference attendees. If you wish to participate in any other conference activities, you must register for the conference. For walk details or registration information, visit the conference website:

BAHA House Tour
Sunday, May 2
Watch for our booth at the Berkeley Architectural Heritage Association 2010 house tour. This year’s tour will be May 2, 1 to 5 p.m., in the Elmwood and Claremont districts. “Looking at Julia Morgan: Early Residences in Berkeley” will highlight the variety of ways that Morgan interpreted the Arts & Crafts and, later, the Mediterranean style. For tickets and information on the tour and a pre-event lecture on women architects in California, go to http://berkeleyheritage.com/
Dedicated to the creation, preservation, and restoration of public paths, steps, and walkways in Berkeley for the use and enjoyment of all.

The Berkeley Path Wanderers Association, an affiliate of Berkeley Partners for Parks, is a volunteer group of community members who have come together to increase public awareness of the City of Berkeley's pathways. Our activities include guided path walks, the mapping of Berkeley’s path network, the building of paths that are proposed, and the restoration of those that need maintenance.

Llamas on the Paths!
In February, Maybeck High School marked its move to its new College Avenue campus with a day-long celebration, including a neighborhood path walk led by BPWA President Colleen Neff. Also out for a stroll were three llamas and their owners, who joined the group. Together they climbed Garber, Pine, Oak Knoll, and Tanglewood Paths, delighting participants, stopping traffic, and leaving lots of smiles in their wake. You never know who you’ll run into on the paths!
