THE WEEKEND TRAINING PROGRAM 2017 – 2018

The Center for Group Studies offers a Weekend Training Program as an alternative or addition to our on-going Training Program. It began in 1990 as an offsite pilot project in group training to students from all over the world outside of New York City. The weekend program was founded and designed under the co-leadership of Dr. Alice Brown and Dr. Lena Furgeri and has expanded to include local New York students.

This program provides training in modern group process: an integration of traditional methods and modern techniques developed by Dr. Louis Ormont, a licensed psychologist with over 40 years of experience leading groups. Our approach is psychodynamic and interactive with particular emphasis on interventions for difficult and pre-oedipal personalities.

PROGRAM OF STUDY

The three-year Training Program, culminating in a Certificate of Completion or Graduation, consists of the following four training components:

1. Training Weekends

We offer three training weekends each year and a total of nine weekends are required to meet the criteria for Certification. Each weekend consists of psychodynamic process groups (experiential and didactic learning), lectures and/or workshops, a supervision group and a training group.

2. Course Work *

The curriculum consists of nine blocks of readings and combines a guided and monitored reading program with the experiential Training Weekend component. Each student is assigned a faculty advisor to work with in person, by correspondence, email, and/or by telephone. A faculty advisor is assigned to each student for a 3-block segment, approximately one year. Each student keeps an ongoing log of his/her reactions to the readings, tapes and other experiences, to which the student's faculty advisor responds.

3. Supervision

Four supervision segments are required, which take place during the second and third years, after the completion of readings blocks 1 through 3. Each segment consists of six one-hour sessions with an assigned supervisor.

* Nine blocks of readings (Each block consists of sixteen readings and may be completed in eight weeks or more.)

THE ESSENCE OF MODERN GROUP

May 4 - 6, 2018

New York, New York

Process Group Leaders: Joseph Acosta, Michael Brook, Gail Brown, Ronnie Levine
Workshop Leaders: Aaron Black, Alice Brown, Sally Henry, Nancy Kelly,
Elizabeth Lanier, Greg MacColl, George Shapiro, Rhoda Shapiro,
Mary Sussillo, Elliott Zeisel

WORKSHOP DESCRIPTION:

The essence of the modern group process can be attributed to a systematic method of enhancing identifications between and among the group members. In addition to being alert to the multiple transferences and resistances being played out in the group setting, we utilize the theoretical construct of bridging to bring the members together for therapeutic advantage. This workshop will address the basic concepts differentiating modern group process from traditional group process and explore the techniques and interventions that are unique to the application of modern group process.

BEHAVIORAL OBJECTIVES:

This workshop is designed to help you:

1. List and describe at least three uses of bridging to empower the group process;
2. Utilize different types of bridging in the group setting;
3. List the protective and maturational functions of contact function when working with pre-oedipal patients in group;
4. Explain how group process facilitates the projection of internal conflicts onto group members;
5. Utilize countertransference feelings as a tool for resolving resistances;
6. Apply techniques to work with the under- and over-insulated group member;
7. Describe the purpose of “joining” a group member’s defenses;
8. Describe how joining, mirroring, and reflecting are used in a dyad to further maturation/progressive communication.

The Center for Group Studies

For All Weekend Training Students Descriptions and Definitions

Process Group

The Weekend Training Program, while it may be therapeutic for participants, is not designed to serve as therapy. The process group is designed as a “here and now” experience focusing on how a person functions in the immediate moment. We ask that all thoughts and feelings towards the other members be put into words. Origins of these thoughts and feelings are also explored. In this venue we are studying resistances to Oedipal level communication. We study how patterns of group form and reform themselves as the members observe both themselves and others within these group patterns. The group leader demonstrates modern group interventions which aim to resolve resistances and foster progressive emotional communication and, when appropriate, explains the underlying theory and the timing of the intervention.

Workshop

The workshop focuses specifically on some aspect of the theme of the weekend using a combination of didactic presentation and experiential material. A reading is assigned for each workshop. The leader then, in whatever way he or she chooses, demonstrates the concepts from the reading through active group process. Specific questions about the theoretical material and how it relates to group leadership are welcomed.

Supervision

In a supportive and collaborative environment, the organizing focus of supervision is the presentation of case material by students. Participants study induced feelings and use parallel process to facilitate the uncovering of where the unidentified resistance lay. The group helps the presenter understand how to move the treatment forward. Associations to the current weekend learning theme as well as discussion of the underlying theory for a particular intervention might be included as it relates to a better understanding of the patient or the group.

Training Group

In the training group the focus is on the development of the professional ego. Interactive responses of the members in a training group are treated as induced feelings. Explorations are directed to identifying these feelings as objective countertransference reactions and then saying “the right things.” These include maturational responses, further explorations, associations and so forth. The training group is designed to help each member to help the other group members to become a better group leader.
