HOW TO WRITE YOUR TEXT

MAY THE WRITING BEGIN!

Writing your letter to expectant parents is a very exciting step in the adoption journey. It's your opportunity to communicate with expectant parents and let them know who you are and what makes you unique. To help make this step easier, the following information is here to help guide you through the writing process.

LENGTH OF THE LETTER

Typically, a final word count should fall between 1,800 to 2,000 words for longer profiles and 900 to 1,000 for the shorter four page profiles. Please keep this in mind as you write. Too much text on a page will seem overwhelming to a reader, so edit judiciously! Photos are typically what expectant parents look at first so make sure to leave plenty of room in your profile for large, engaging photos.

HOW TO BEGIN WRITING

Looking at a blank page can be very intimidating. To break up the letter and make it easier to begin writing, create a Word document and set it up with 8-10 headings which may include: Dear Expectant Parents, Our Story, Meet (Your Name), Our Home & Community, Meet Our Family, Our Work, A Few of my Favorites, Thoughts about Parenting. (If you are single, simply substitute with the word 'my' where appropriate.) If there is something about you that is unique and may set you apart, feel free to include this information as well.

How much should you write for each category? Ideally, you should write 2-3 paragraphs per heading. Again, be careful to find the balance between too short and too long when describing these areas of your life. It's also a good idea to use conversational, casual language instead of trying to use fancy, academic-type language. You want to come across as friendly and approachable rather than stuffy and arrogant.

SELECTION & QUALITY OF PHOTOS

WHY PHOTOS ARE SO IMPORTANT

A picture is worth a thousand words. Your profile will be the single most important piece of your adoption outreach and it's your photos that will be the most important tool you have for sharing your story and style with expectant parents. Be thoughtful about the process of selecting and taking photos so space isn't wasted in your profile.

When a expectant parent looks at a profile, the photos will be the first thing that captures their eye. Before a word is read, they will scan the photos and gather an impression of your family. A expectant parent will most likely sit down with a large stack of profiles, pick up the first one and flip through it without reading the text. If it doesn't "click" s/he will put it down and move onto the next.

GETTING STARTED WITH YOUR PHOTOS

Most of us don't have a lot of "profile quality" photos lying around, especially casual portrait style photos for the cover and closing pages. A friend that enjoys photography can probably do a good job of taking photos for you so you don't have to call in a professional.

A piece of advice is to start taking "candid" photos from the start of your adoption process. Most of your current photos are likely vacation photos, and while those are great, we don't live on vacation. A profile needs to share a bit of your daily life. Head out to social events with a camera and ask people to take a few shots of you alone and with others. As you participate in hobbies do the same. It's important for a expectant parent to see who you are, what you enjoy doing and the "village" that surrounds you. Do this for a few weeks and you will eventually have a group of pictures to use for your profile. While photos showing your family and friends are great make sure at least 50% of the photos are of you as a couple and individuals.

HELPFUL hints

- » PUT THE CAMERA ON THE HIGHEST QUALITY SETTING BEFORE TAKING PHOTOS.
- » IF DOING A PHOTO SHOOT, TRY TO CHANGE TOPS MIDWAY FOR VARIETY.
- » WATCH FOR "NO-NOS" THAT DISTRACT FROM YOUR PHOTOS LIKE ALCOHOL, SUNGLASSES, CIGARETTES, REVEALING CLOTHING OR SWIM SUITS.

HOW TO CHOOSE THE RIGHT PHOTOS

To think about photo selection, break the process down into WHEN and WHY. What are the photos of, when was it taken and why should we include it?

WHEN » Photos that are old, grainy or have a brown tint to them should not be included, no matter what wonderful memory the photograph represents. Old photos make you look old. The same goes for wedding photos. As emotionally attached as we are to our own wedding photos they just do not have the same importance to a potential expectant parent and tend to date you as well.

WHY » This is the most important question to ask. Remember, your photos should evoke emotion, and looking at the group of them together should give a certain feeling about who you are. Capture fun, happy moments and your photos will dance off the page. Too many staged photos with family members shoulder to shoulder and the reader will begin to skim. Do your photos share something relevant about who you are and how you live your lives? It's not enough to say "I look good in this photo," you need to be able to say "this photo shows me in the garden and since we grow our own veggies this is important." See the difference?

QUALITY & RESOLUTION OF PHOTOS

IMPORTANT NOTES REGARDING CELL PHONE PHOTOS:

It is critical to get the photos off your phone in their original, high resolution size. Do not email or text photos to yourself to get them off your phones, this will destroy the quality. Using the chord, connect your phone to your computer, and then navigate to the Camera or DCIM folder on your phone and move the photos manually from your phone to Dropbox.

Cell phones don't do well in low-light situations or indoors. Skip those photos entirely—they will be dark, grainy and dull and I'm not able to correct them or enhance them

Scanning: Many people find they have paper photos that need to be scanned for use in their profile. Professional scanning at 300 DPI is highly recommended for these photos.

» THE LIGHT IN EARLY MORNING OR EVENING IS UNIVERSALLY FLATTERING, AND WILL PREVENT YOU FROM SQUINTING OR NEEDING SUNGLASSES. BE AWARE OF WHERE THE SUN IS AND TRY TO AVOID HARSH SHADOWS ON YOUR FACES.

» KEEP THE BACKGROUND AS NEUTRAL AS POSSIBLE— FOLIAGE, BEACH, PARK, ETC. ARE ALL GREAT; FLORAL COUCHES AND DATED WALLPAPER ARE NOT.

THINK ABOUT A GREAT LAYOUT

EVERYONE LOVES A STORY

Nobody wants to feel like they are reading a book report when looking at your profile. Instead, try to tell the story of your life. Think about the flow of pictures and text from page to page to make it interesting. Also remember to leave some blank space so everything isn't cluttered on the page. Sometimes less can be more!

USING COLORS & FONTS

There is nothing that speaks about your style like color. When thinking about colors for your profile, pick a few of your favorites that seem to work well together and use those same colors throughout the profile for consistency. Having new colors on every page breaks up the flow and can be distracting. If you are having some trouble picking colors that go well together, look to resources online such as pinterest.com or paint samples at the local hardware store.

When it comes to selecting a font, use something that is easy to read (for instance, avoid decorative or fancy script fonts.) If text is too difficult to read, an expectant parent will just skip over it. The font should not distract from the photos on the page.

DON'T FORGET CAPTIONS

It might seem like an insignificant detail but make sure to write interesting photo captions and include them in your profile. It's a great way to add little interesting tidbits about you, your friends/family, interests or traditions.

Try to get creative with your captions and describe what is really going on in the photo. Something like "a picture of our backyard" isn't going to grab a reader's attention but "we love making s'mores during campfires" is much more fun and informative. Photo captions can be great little elements on the page to add to the overall design of your profile.
