Keeping Children Singing During COVID

During the current COVID pandemic the San Diego Children's Choir is more important than ever for the children and adolescents participating in its programs. When the virus initially hit the US, the Choir adapted almost immediately to the circumstances and offered nearly uninterrupted access to music without compromising artistic standards and expectations. Although no amount of virtual or distanced rehearsing, performing, and recording can replicate the experience of live music and collaboration with other musicians in person, the choir has maintained the highest level of instruction and interaction possible. Preparing for the Winter Concert offered children the comfort of routine rehearsals with peers, who work together to sing in harmony. The reassuring discipline and inspiration of the gifted teachers along with the emotional outlet and joy of expressing a variety of feelings and emotions in song brings joy and hope to children during this challenging holiday season.
