Inclusive Exhibit Design: Process

Beth Tauke, Associate Professor - Architecture
Center for Inclusive Design and Environmental Access (IDEA)
University at Buffalo – State University of New York

Erasing the Border
Ana Teresa Fernández
Heterogeneity in design practice is essential in envisioning and creating just and equitable futures.

Diana Fernandez, landscape architect
Inclusive processes focus on the relationship of design to the changing nature of our societies.
People and their needs come first.

Warming Huts
Patkau Architects
Power relationships are equal.
Human diversity and life experience are valued.
Recipients of design participate on the team.
Cultural contexts and situational factors determine the approach.
Evidence-based decision making and evaluation ground the process.
Considering unintended consequences expands the scope of inquiry.
Inclusive practice uses the design process to bring about social change.
Design cannot solve all of our problems.
But it can help.
Design is optimistic and persistent.
Inclusive design infuses safety, function, and DELIGHT!
Incorporate inclusive processes into your work. Have fun!