In its more than 35-year terror campaign against Turkiye, the PKK has been responsible for the deaths of over 40,000 people, including women, children and infants. The YPG is its Syrian branch.

The US Treasury accused the Sulaiman Shah Brigade of subjecting civilians in Afrin to "abductions and extortion" and targeting Kurdish residents, noting that many people "are subjected to harassment, violence and torture," the statement read.

"We welcome the decision of the US Treasury regarding imposing sanctions on some leaders of the mercenary factions for committing war crimes and displacing Kurds from Afrin," Bedran Ciya Kurd, co-founder of the YPG, said in a statement.

HTS wants more than anything to strike a strategic relationship with Ankara. "They want strong economic and military ties, a real partnership," Drevon said, adding that he believed that the group had already taken some steps towards those goals.

"They have committed to international security. They don't carry out terrorist attacks abroad. For me there is no reason for them to be listed," Drevon asserted.

Ajjoub explained that since 2013, HTS "has undergone significant ideological shifts, distancing itself from the global jihadism ideologies of IS and al-Qaeda, respectively." He went on, "Consequently, both IS and Al-Qaeda no longer exist in their current form."

"Killing the "caliph" would "undoubtedly enhance HTS' reputation as a valuable ally of the international coalition against terrorism," Ajjoub said. However, its relationship with Ankara "is paramount," hence "we need to focus on that relationship and not the labels," Drevon asserted.

"The Turkish security forces' violence against attempted migrants at the border has been pretty well documented. If they really wanted to seal up the border, it's more doable than people typically assume," he explained.

"Even after the conclusion of most cases on the genocide, the archives remain the property of the UN," he was quoted saying during a visit to Rwanda.

"The minister said even if they are handed over to Tanzania, the materials would be shared with the rest of the world."

"It is of utmost important to our clients, who alleged their relatives were murdered by UK Special Forces in Afghanistan, that the truth is uncovered and that they are able to participate fully in the inquiry."

In an unusual move, the chair has also denied the families access to special advocates whose roles are to examine material heard in closed sessions and to represent the excluded party’s interests.

The order withholds from disclosure information relating to methods, tactics and equipment of UK and foreign partner operatives, as well as details of the identity of MoD and RMP witnesses. It prohibits "caused" if the MoD’s application for secrecy was not granted.

The international community must show that education can get through to the people of Afghanistan, in spite of the Afghan government’s bans," he said.

Brown said 54 of the 80 edicts issued by the Taliban explicitly target women and girls and dismantle their rights, most recently banning them from taking university exams and visiting public places including help to go to school.

"The [Taliban] government is denying girls’ access to education, which is a violation of their rights," he said. "This is happening in schools and universities."
