During the COVID-19 pandemic, when reported gender-based violence cases in Kenya shot up by 300%, the killing of Starlet, along with those of more than 31 women in January, led thousands of Kenyans to call for justice.

The suspect, John Matara, was arrested after he checked himself into a hospital with stab wounds from the attack. His arrest was a significant moment in the fight for justice, but it was also a sign of the continued prevalence of violence against women in Kenya. According to the Kenyan government, almost 60 women have been killed since the beginning of the year, highlighting the urgent need for action.

Paralleling this trend, the government has launched a campaign to raise awareness and provide support for women facing violence. The organization helps women escape violent relationships, puts them up in safe houses, and provides counseling and legal assistance. This initiative is a vital step in addressing the issue, as the government continues to work towards a safer future for all women in the country.

Therefore, this International Women's Day, we call for the following:

1. Support and Protection: Implementing laws and policies that ensure the safety and rights of women. This includes stronger penalties for those who perpetrate violence against women.
2. Awareness and Education: Increasing public awareness about the nature and extent of gender-based violence through education and media campaigns.
3. Access to Justice: Ensuring that victims have access to the legal system and support services to help them seek justice.

As a global community, we must work together to address the root causes of gender-based violence and create a world where women are free from fear and violence.
