LETTER FROM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR & BOARD PRESIDENT

Our 2015 Annual Report tells the story of how we are listening, counseling, supporting and guiding survivors of sexual and domestic violence of all ages to heal from the trauma of intentional violence and, when possible, to seek justice. We continue to transform healing, through using trauma informed mind-body-spirit practices and, in particular, integrating the Community Resiliency Model created by The Trauma Institute. Our Social Work Intern program is thriving along with expanded volunteer trainings, and our clinical department has tripled its therapists. We have doubled our Domestic Abuse Response Team collaboration with the LAPD to 4 Police Divisions, and our staff and volunteer advocates are at the ready to respond to domestic violence calls and make contact with survivors in real time. Our prevention education training has expanded to include training sports teams, faculty and students on college campuses, and we have increased our programing at local middle and high schools. This year we were thrilled to take Denim Day to Italy through our partnership with GUESS?, our fashion sponsor, with a grand kickoff in Milan! Foundational to 2015 at POV were opportunities and, of course, the challenges that accompany every opportunity. Our staff is at an all time high of 50 members and our budget peaked at $3 million! This growth caused us to engage in some organizational reflection, and we invested in a process to strengthen our practices. We engaged Improvement Technologies, an organizational consultant group, to take the executive leadership team and the Board of Directors through a strength assessment, and we worked on team building and leadership development. This process will continue to benefit, as we strive to be an organization committed to excellence. This growth and level of engagement could not happen without the dedication of our staff, volunteers, funders, donors and our collaborators. We hope you find the highlights of our year engaging and informative and will continue to support Peace over Violence in our mission to build healthy relationships, families and communities free from violence.

Mission Statement

Building healthy relationships, families, and communities free from sexual, domestic and interpersonal violence.
A Day Over Violence features the stories of five volunteer counselor advocates who work in our emergency services department. Please read their stories to learn about POV’s counselors and the survivors they serve.

Adam was in his home taking his overnight hotline shift, asleep but ready for answering calls. It was then he answered a call from Lisa, who was quiet and unable to sleep. Through the time they spoke, Lisa told Adam that days before, at her babysitting job, the children’s father came home and sexually assaulted her. After reporting the rape to the police, the officer called a Peace Over Violence counselor advocate who met her at the hospital and stayed with her while she had a rape kit exam. She was counseled, supported and given resources: including our 24-hour rape and battering hotline, which is where she spoke to Adam. When they spoke on the phone, Lisa told Adam she had been experiencing flashbacks, nightmares and severe anxiety. Adam was able to explain to Lisa how these were normal reactions after experiencing a traumatic event. He then utilized the training he’d received and introduced Lisa to techniques that could help soothe her and regulate her nervous system.

Lisa had a sense of calm.

Fiscal Year July 1, 2014 – July 30, 2015

3:12 AM

Adam was in his home taking his overnight hotline shift, asleep but ready for answering calls. It was then he answered a call from Lisa, who was quiet and unable to sleep. Through the time they spoke, Lisa told Adam that days before, at her babysitting job, the children’s father came home and sexually assaulted her. After reporting the rape to the police, the officer called a Peace Over Violence counselor advocate who met her at the hospital and stayed with her while she had a rape kit exam. She was counseled, supported and given resources: including our 24-hour rape and battering hotline, which is where she spoke to Adam. When they spoke on the phone, Lisa told Adam she had been experiencing flashbacks, nightmares and severe anxiety. Adam was able to explain to Lisa how these were normal reactions after experiencing a traumatic event. He then utilized the training he’d received and introduced Lisa to techniques that could help soothe her and regulate her nervous system. The fact that Lisa could call the hotline at anytime of day or night, that someone would be there, gave her a sense of calm.
Jane and her 7-year-old son walked into Peace Over Violence's office. Because she had been beaten and strangled by her boyfriend the night before, she left the house right after the incident with her son and everything she could carry. While she considered reporting the assault to the police, she was too afraid. The intervention team worked on contacting local shelters to locate temporary safe housing. Unfortunately, they were unable to find housing for Jane and her son. POV was able to assist them with a night stay at a safe hotel. The following day, Jane met Selene at the police station where they began working on her immediate needs. We were again unable to place them in a domestic violence shelter due to lack of bed availability. While in safety planning with Jane, she mentioned her support system that included her father. After calling him and reaching out for support, he agreed to take them in immediately. The fact that Jane could come to our offices and know that someone would be there to counsel and support her was key. Through our emergency services funding, POV was able to purchase bus tickets for Jane and her son to reunite with her father in Northern California. The fact that Jane could come to our offices and know that someone would be there to counsel and support her made her feel empowered to take steps to leave her abusive partner.

It was 1:27 pm when Aileen met Lynn at a courthouse in downtown Los Angeles. She had been beaten by her ex-boyfriend while getting groceries at the supermarket the day before. He grabbed her by the hair, dragged and punched her several times before store security intervened. All the while Lynn had her child in her arms. The police were called and her ex-boyfriend was arrested. Lynn was terrified for her safety and the safety of her child. Lynn had ended the abusive relationship several months ago, but her ex constantly forced his way back into their lives by threatening to physically harm them if she didn’t agree to see him. The evening that her ex-boyfriend was arrested Lynn met a Domestic Abuse Response Team (DART) counselor advocate who worked with Law Enforcement to give her an Emergency Protective Order. Feeling overwhelmed and confused by the steps that followed to file for a Temporary Restraining Order, she asked if the DART advocate could arrange for a POV counselor advocate to meet her at court the next day, which is where she met Aileen. The criminal justice and civil court systems can be confusing and overwhelming for survivors. The legal jargon and proceedings are examples of why it’s important for an advocate to be an option for survivors. An advocate can explain unfamiliar legal terms and the process, as well as be a support person.

At LAPD Northeast Community Police Station, Officer Martinez invited April to join her in one of the interview rooms, which is where she met Rani for the first time. Rani had walked into the station about an hour before, scared, in pain and not knowing what to do. Earlier that day, he was physically and sexually assaulted by his partner of 2 years. Officer Martinez took the report and April helped to provide emotional support and community resources. As a DART counselor advocate, April works with law enforcement and offers her extensive training on domestic violence to help ensure safety and support for survivors and their families. Rani was in crisis. He was horribly upset, anxious, and cried uncontrollably, so April stepped in to provide crisis intervention. Together, they worked through CRM (Community Resiliency Model), a trauma-informed counseling method that enables survivors to stabilize and restore their emotional balance. Before long, Rani calmed and felt empowered enough to address his immediate needs.

Toward the end of Ashley’s shift, she was called to San Gabriel Valley’s SART (Sexual Assault Response Team) Center to respond to a new sexual abuse case. Upon arrival, the Sexual Assault Forensic Nurse Examiner shared the details of the case with Ashley and then introduced her to Mario and his son, Pablo, who were referred for an exam after filing a police report. 6-year-old Pablo reported to his father that he did not want to be around their teenage neighbor anymore because of “inappropriate touching” and that he was scared. As they sat and waited for the exam, Ashley spent time providing much-needed emotional support. Pablo cried aloud, afraid to see or speak to the nurse because he thought he was in trouble, while Mario, on the verge of tears, expressed his frustration with failing to protect his son. Ashley actively listened, normalized, and validated their feelings and assured them that what happened was not their fault and that reporting the crime was protecting Pablo. She continued to provide support throughout the duration of the exam by holding Pablo’s hand and advocated for the exam to move at a comfortable pace for Pablo.
On Friday, October 16, 2015, the 44th Annual Humanitarian Awards was held at the Los Angeles landmark, The Dorothy Chandler Pavilion. The evening celebrated our collective work by highlighting inspiring individuals and organizations who have contributed to the elimination of domestic and sexual violence.

In 2015, Peace Over Violence’s Denim Day, our annual sexual violence prevention education campaign, engaged over 20 million participants to make a social statement with their fashion by wearing denim as a visible means of protest against the misconceptions that surround sexual assault.

For the second consecutive year, Peace Over Violence partnered with GUESS? Inc. and the Guess Foundation to promote the 16th Annual Denim Day. The partnership allowed us to reach individuals in all 50 states and 118 foreign countries to wear jeans and commit to educating themselves and others about sexual violence.

PARTNERS IN PREVENTION

KINGS OVER VIOLENCE

POV began a new partnership with the LA Kings – Kings Over Violence. We were invited to train the team, coaches and executives on sexual assault and domestic violence prevention.

VENICE HIGH SCHOOL AND LAUSD

During Sexual Assault Awareness Month, the Prevention team trained over 2,000 youth at Venice High School on healthy relationships and sexual assault prevention education.

POV’S CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE PREVENTION ADVISORY COUNCIL

Twelve organizations participated in a series of discussion and community dialogue on local efforts to prevent child sexual abuse and sex trafficking of minors and considered shared strategies such as connectedness between child-parent, schools, and communities, education, and knowledge of local resources.

METRO PARTNERSHIP

In April, 2015, Metro formed a partnership with Peace Over Violence and debuted “It’s Off Limits” campaign to encourage victims and witnesses of sexual harassment to make a report to the Sheriff’s hotline.

YOUTH OVER VIOLENCE SUMMER LEADERSHIP INSTITUTE

During the summer of 2015, POV trained 23 youth to become activists and change agents to prevent violence through various channels including: songwriting, digital storytelling and community organizing and mobilization.

With the tools they gained, these youth show their leadership in their schools, families and communities.

Songwriting
“We were able to work with A.S.H.E.S the CHOSEN and his team of producers in professional recording studios. They showed us how to write a hit song, while expressing how we felt through our own lyrics, instead of expressing them with physical or mental violence.”

- Alyssa de la Torre, 13

Digital Storytelling
“The group and I were able to complete and create a video with a powerful message about consent, using personal testimonies from LA youth and POV involved adults. I was amazed at how a group of youth could come together and create a video that holds so much meaning.”

- Joshua Ochoa, 18

Community Organizing
“I learned how to reach out to local restaurants, work with different individuals, improve my public speaking skills, and create a bond with the youth in my track. In planning the graduation, we managed to get through barriers, receiving numerous food donations and the venue at no cost.”

- Ana Rodriguez, 16

MANAGEMENT TEAM

In April, 2015, Metro formed a partnership with Peace Over Violence and debuted “It’s Off Limits” campaign to encourage victims and witnesses of sexual harassment to make a report to the Sheriff’s hotline.
