amy & jess

Our wedding took place in the woods along the coast in Big Sur, California. It's such a special place. Jess often goes there at least once a year just to be alone with nature. We decided there was no better place than this to consecrate our love and devotion. It's dark and silent and a little dangerous. It whispers its secrets when you listen to the sounds of the stream and the wind. This was especially true for us as our wedding took place the day after a massive storm moved its way through the Central Coast. We spent our first night huddled together in a twin bed at the New Camaldoli Hermitage, a silent monastic retreat center. We made love to the force of the storm pounding against our windowpane with Amy's crystals set outside to be cleansed in the rain.

The next morning the rain was still coming down in heavy sheets when we woke up, and we thought for sure we'd be having our ceremony in the car. But as if by magic, just 20 minutes before leaving our room to meet our lovely officiant and photographer, the rain stopped and the sky opened up, the sun shined down and warmed the earth. It was one of the most beautiful mornings we'd ever woken up to.
