How can education meet the world we’re living in?

We should look beyond designing and education to meet the current world with all its flaws.

Through supporting students to ask deeper questions, discuss different views, and listen to each other, education can better prepare students to design and create the world we want and need to be living in.

Maya is a youth development and education professional with a focus on social innovation, experiential learning and leadership development. She is currently working as a Coach and Student Experience Designer at Minerva Schools. She is a valued member of the ThoughtBox advisory board.