SCHOOLWIDE ESSAY PROMPT #14

BACKGROUND: March is Women's History Month and while women make up 50% of the population in the United States and the world, they don't always get the credit they deserve for their contributions to society. The celebration of Women's History Month first began as "Women's History Week" in 1978 but after lobbying for two years, it was changed to a full month by President Jimmy Carter in 1980. Similar to Black History Month, the focus is on the often unrecognized contributions of women to the greater society.

NOTE: Data on earnings are reported for 19 years of full-time employees who work full-time, year-round positions. Data for Hispanic/Latino is for only one other category below, just that race alone.

Chart: Taylor Spence / Statista / Census Population Survey, Annual Income and Benefits Survey | 1/16/2021 ©

NOTE: Data are seasonally adjusted. Data are shown for full-time workers who work at least 35 hours a week.

women's weekly earnings were 61.5% of men's weekly earnings. There has been some progress over the years, and in the fourth quarter of 2021 women's weekly earnings were 84.3% of men's weekly earnings. (Top Chart).

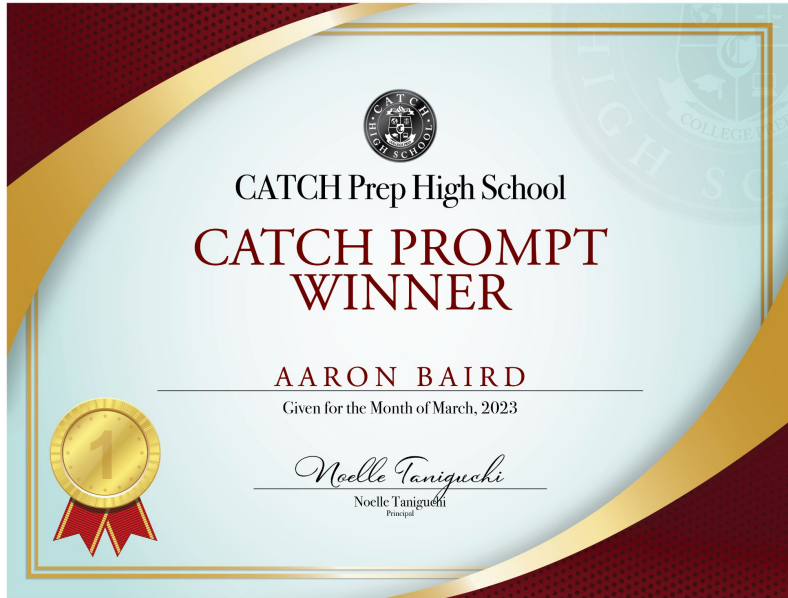

Black and Hispanic women are most affected by the wage gap when compared to non-Hispanic white men. Based on 2020 data, Black women made just around 64% of what non-Hispanic white men made. As tracked by the Census Bureau, Hispanic women could be of any race, and their pay gap between non-Hispanic white men is even wider than that of Black women.

THE PROMPT: Look at the two graphs and the data given in the prompt. Why do you think women are still paid less than men? What solutions are there to close the wage gap? What are some contributions have women made to society that you think should be celebrated?
