Through media arts education, Wide Angle Youth Media cultivates and amplifies the voices of Baltimore youth to engage audiences across generational, cultural, and social divides. Our programs inspire creativity and instill confidence in young people, empowering them with skills to navigate school, career, and life.

SINCE 2000:

6,652+ youth engaged in programs

3.7+ million audience members

1,676+ media projects | 2,524 donors

“Wide Angle’s Design Apprenticeship not only gave me the physical tools for success but also prepared me mentally and emotionally for the workforce.”

Chamia Winston
Social Media Intern
As Wide Angle’s Executive Director, I am truly proud of our youth and their achievements during our 20th year. Thanks to a community of talented young media makers, passionate staff, dedicated donors who believe in the strength of our mission, and committed partners, this organization has grown beyond anything we could have dreamed.

When I joined Wide Angle in 2003, we were still trying to make a name for ourselves. In that first decade, we struggled with cash flow, meeting budget goals, and finding an adequate physical space. Since then, Wide Angle has built upon its humble beginnings to thrive: we went from engaging 28 youth in 2001 to almost 500 in FY21, our budget has increased by 500%, our staff has tripled, over 3 million audience members have viewed Wide Angle youth-produced media, and young people in our programs have created photography, video, graphic design, and social media deliverables for over 150 community-based partners and production clients. Today, we are based in the Miller’s Court building, where we have 2 state-of-the-art media labs and our social enterprise program, Wide Angle Productions.

Alongside these successes, the challenges of COVID-19 continued to shape our approach to youth development and creative media making. Our young people, like students across the country, lost traditional opportunities to celebrate their own milestones or create coming of age memories that were common before the pandemic. Calls for racial justice continued to motivate our staff and our youth, mental health became a critical focus area, and building social connections remained critical.

In response, media instructors tailored projects to individual students instead of implementing a collaborative format, giving youth greater autonomy to process and share their personal experiences during the pandemic. Our staff refocused efforts to center student safety by holding space for them to share and support one another. We remained committed to older youth employment by offering continued apprenticeships to all youth who were interested. We developed new course offerings for remote learning and cultivated partnerships to reach new students, uplift critical social messages, and build distribution channels. Our Emergency Fund continued to provide youth with access to food, technology, housing and educational assistance to ensure their basic needs were met.

The accomplishments of our students, staff and organization that I share today are yours as well. The seeds that were sown two decades ago have been nurtured by you: your insights, partnership, investment and words of encouragement have allowed us to expand beyond anything we envisioned at the start. We are deeply grateful for your participation, dedication, collaboration, and generosity. Thank you.
Amplifying Youth Voice for 20 Years

2000

Wide Angle started in 2000 with community partnerships. Here’s founder Gin Ferrara facilitating a video workshop with students in Charles Village.

Youth media makers create documentaries about community issues.

Wide Angle students hosted the Youth Media Festival for thousands of youth across Baltimore from 2005-2013.

Lendi Tellington and Kyle Halle-Erby produced Schooling Baltimore Street, a documentary elevating advocacy efforts of students and organizations to promote equitable access to education.

2009

Wide Angle moved into the Miller’s Court building in 2009, expanding its classroom space and youth editing work areas.

In 2012, Design Team was added to high school offerings. Their first project was a campaign in partnership with the MTA.

“You all gave an excellent opportunity to this young boy from West Baltimore and so what I know for sure is that when you all work with young people who will eventually become adults, who will eventually start families of their own, not only do you change the trajectory of that young person’s life, you change the trajectory of community, of a city.”

Impact Report FY21

Wide Angle Productions (WAP) was established in 2015 to provide workforce opportunities for older youth and drive organizational revenue. Screenshot from an early CSX video about rail safety, Lucky Guy.

Since its beginnings, Wide Angle has recognized the importance of summer programming for middle and high school students, with programs based at its offices and across the city.

Baltimore Speaks Out celebrates over two decades of programming and continues to be a core middle school offering today.

In 2017, the MediaWorks program was launched to provide intensive training for high school and older youth each summer and increase our workforce focus.

In 2019, Wide Angle Productions brought on the first full-time Arts2Work national apprentice Sakinah Bowman in 2019 and currently has 3 PT, 1 FT, and 2 FT Journeyworkers on staff.

We transitioned to fully virtual engagement in response to the pandemic. Moving forward, offerings will continue to embrace the benefits that virtual, in-person and hybrid programs offer youth.

Thanks to generous philanthropic support, Wide Angle conducted two capital expansions (2015, 2019). Today, our offices include two state-of-the-art Media Labs and a separate WAP workspace.

Measuring Success

We evaluate success through short-term skill growth and long-term impact. Our efforts in FY21 included visits from guest artists, workforce readiness and increasing audience members.

COLLEGE & CAREER

- 17 guest artists & mentors
- 2 college prep presentations
- 100% of seniors enrolled in spring high school programs had a college or career pathway in place & 80% moved on to higher education, compared to 53% citywide.
- 100% of apprentices were enrolled in college and/or had other employment, compared to 80% of older youth citywide.
- 12 apprentices remained on staff
- 11 workforce partners

23% average skill growth

Students in 25+ hours of instruction were measured through pre- and post-evaluations to track Creativity, Literacy, Listening, Public Speaking, Technical Skills, Professionalism, and Teamwork/Leadership.

DISTRIBUTION

Youth created work that was shared to audiences locally, nationally, and globally.

- 14 film festivals & special screenings of youth media
- 9 videos accepted into festivals
- 62 countries where videos were viewed online
- 1,189,455 virtual & live audience members
- 10 articles & radio interviews
- 11 blog posts

“Wide Angle Youth Media gives me an outlet for things and helps me feel more creative. When quarantine was in the middle, I was feeling very unmotivated. Wide Angle helps ground me and helps me feel like I’m talking and interacting with actual people and not just people behind screens.”

Indigo Turner
High School student
Community Impact

“It is important to highlight ALL parts of history and Wide Angle has given me a space to do just that. It has been liberating to be in charge of my own learning and gain knowledge on the things most interesting to me.”

“100% of the most meaningful work I think we’ve ever done is during the pandemic.”

FOCUS ON COVID RESPONSE

Wide Angle established grounding tenets to guide its COVID-19 response, and continued to make progress towards them in FY21.

Resilience: Wide Angle’s leadership and Board streamlined operations, added to virtual offerings (with limited in-person production shoots), identified new funding streams (via grants, fee-for-service programming and production clients), promoted financial sustainability and remained an anchor to the community through the next stages of the pandemic.

Storytelling: Staff established new avenues for students to use available resources, as well as devices distributed on-loan or to keep from Wide Angle, allowing youth to participate without disruption. These efforts aim to bridge the arts/media technology opportunity divide that continued to widen during the pandemic. Instructors in middle school and some high school classes shifted from collaborative group projects to individual assignments and projects to ensure that youth could be self-guided and utilize appropriate channels to express themselves.

Responsive Action: Media Instructors remained adaptable and creative to provide artistic engagement for students in a virtual setting. The organization cultivated additional opportunities for youth leadership, expanded its state-registered apprenticeships, and built partnerships with area schools to meet youth where they are. To help alleviate the disproportionate impact of COVID-19 on BIPOC artists and communities, Wide Angle increased its Emergency Fund to support students, staff and alumni in need, and kept apprentices on payroll.

Clarity: Wide Angle refined its internal and external communications strategy; developed new methods to communicate with students and alumni; fine tuned ways to showcase their work; and developed partnerships to amplify youth voice through screenings, presentations and virtual panels. These efforts allowed Wide Angle to double its number of FY21 audience members.
DESIGNING FOR PUBLIC HEALTH

Design Apprentices teamed up with the Baltimore Mayor’s Office to support their campaign to promote social distancing and address vaccine hesitancy (including bus shelter posters installed across the city) and partnered with Baltimore City Public Schools to develop a wrap for their Str/EATS Cafe food truck. Design studio students promoted Black mental health awareness in collaboration with Digital Harbor Foundation and Baltimore Neighborhood Network.

SUPPORTING RACIAL JUSTICE

Youth uplifted racial justice through a variety of projects, centering diversity in the media during Wide Angle’s 20th Birthday celebration, developing tests to evaluate the media we consume, celebrating Amanda Gorman’s The Hill We Climb (left image), reflecting on the Dereck Chauvin case, and highlighting the intersection of race and food insecurity during MediaWorks.

OUR SHARED LANGUAGE

The communications team initiated an audit of our social media channels and surveyed students on how to center racial justice while uplifting their work, and added a summer Social Media Internship pilot. Staff defined keywords in Wide Angle’s mission statement as well as terms that shape our approach to youth development and social justice, building transparency and ensuring our language reflects who we are as an organization.
Highlights from the Year

Students explored the intersection of racial justice and food insecurity in Baltimore during MediaWorks.

17 guest artists joined virtual programming from across the country.

Social media takeovers, vlogs, and blogs continued to amplify student perspectives over the year.

Baltimore Speaks Out continued to engage youth virtually and through a pilot program at Harlem Park EMS.

The Str/EATS Cafe truck (wrap and logo created by Design Apprentices) was built to deliver meals to BCPS families during the pandemic.

“Danielle started Wide Angle in 2010. At the time, I believe she was 11 years old - just a natural creator. Wide Angle gave her the opportunity to be able to bring things out that was inside, to express. When she saw her own growth...it gave Danielle the vision for her whole future.”

Dona Clapperton
Parent

In FY21 our partnership with Arts2Work expanded to include 2 full time and 1 part time federally registered apprentices on staff.
“No matter the story - local, national, or global, it’s better when youth voice is at the table. Young people have a way of questioning the status quo that adults forget. We need them at the table now more than ever.”

Gin Ferrara
Founder & Former Executive Director
Wide Angle Productions

Wide Angle Productions worked with the Baltimore Design School and other clients to uplift their stories of social impact through projects completed remotely and a limited return to in-person with shoots following safety protocols.

Youth created #WAYMiesInColor to call for more diversity throughout the media production industry.

Wide Angle celebrated 20 years with a virtual Birthday Party organized and hosted by students in the Virtual Event Planning class.

A new Photography track was launched for high school students in spring 2021.

Productions created a video for Radio One and 92QJams’ #ICareBaltimore campaign highlighting three local social enterprises who focus on youth workforce development.
Intentional Growth

Our continued COVID-19 response built upon our longer-term goals of sustainability, leveraging resources to uplift others and cultivating more equitable employment pathways. Organizational actions included conducting an HR audit; increasing the Emergency Fund to support students, alumni and staff; and starting a compensation equity study (completed in 2022). Here’s a snapshot of how we met the needs of the moment, thanks to your support.

As our organization makes efforts to move towards a more equitable society, we have shifted how we credit our Individual and Corporate Donors and Volunteers. All supporters are listed alphabetically below, and traditional giving levels have been removed from our Donor List. We feel that this is an important step that reflects our values, because every donation (of time, money, or in-kind support, at any amount) is important to Wide Angle. In addition to the donors listed by name, we recognize and acknowledge those who make contributions through workplace giving campaigns, AmazonSmile, or other special campaigns. We may not know your names, but we are humbled by your generosity.

“My favorite part about being an Arts2Work Apprentice with Wide Angle is getting to be a part of something that is bigger than just me. I feel like being an apprentice now will lead to a future where more youth, specifically Black youth from Baltimore City, have the opportunity to become paid apprentices in the field that they have a passion for. I love going out for production shoots and connecting with other young people that have an interest in filmmaking because they get to see a team of people who look like them actually doing big things. Hopefully, that can inspire them to keep working and search for opportunities.”

“...citizens of Baltimore City, to make monuments that would send the message that you believe is important. Well, who is that person?”

Design Apprentice DeShawn Fortune kickstarted his freelance career with Marketing & Communications Committee member Sarah Lohnes! He created a brand identity and advertisements for her podcast, Who Deserves a Monument?
“WAYM has always had the necessary ingredients: longevity, sustainability, passion, desire to serve, open-mindedness, acceptance of those served, and presence in the community. WAYM is a safe space for many. Always has been.”

-Charday Hall, Board Member, Alumni, & Parent Representative

“I’ve seen the life long impact Wide Angle has made in the life of Baltimore students.”

- Willie Johnson Jr, Donor, Community Partner, & Former Board Member

“I love the Wide Angle Youth Media mission, the youth, and especially the exciting and creative output that comes from the students.”

- Russell Ewing, Donor

- Joe* & Diana Harrington, Donors, Parent Representatives & Former Board Member*

“Wide Angle offers incredible opportunities for our city’s young people to learn and grow!”

- Karen Alexander, Donor & Parent Representative

-Charday Hall tabling at a Wide Angle booth in 2013.
