In collaboration with John Matthews Architects, the restoration and conversion includes 14 guest rooms and 24 standalone treehouses inspired by the Redwood environment

Ranging from 416 ft to 434 ft, large windows provide natural light into each guest room, with metal accents and wood features, that tie the indoor and outdoor elements together. Elevated on stilts, the private treehouses face outward toward the forest canopy.

The dining and common living spaces of the 14 acre grounds include the loft, a two storey room with a fireplace and wraparound decks.

The boutique spa and treatment rooms feature floral tile patterns and a metal frame mosaic. Intimate nooks throughout the spa allow guests to unwind and relax.

“ With an extraordinary site to work with, it was imperative for us to bring natural materials such as wood and stone, and quiet tones of moss and slate grey, into the interiors to reflect the majestic surroundings. ”

Jill I. Cole, Managing Principal, CMCA.
