VAN BERGEN.

About the year 1640, MARTEN GERRETSEN VAN BERGEN, or Marte Gerritse, as he always called himself, and as he was always called, came to New Netherland. He is said to have been a cousin or a nephew of Kiliaan Van Rensselaer, of Amsterdam, and to have come to Rensselaerswyck under his patronage. Marte Gerritse soon became a man of note in the colony. For many years he was Komissaris of Fort Orange, an office of varied civil function, and of considerable profit, as the office of Komissie is to this day in Java. He was a member of the governor's council, one of the justices of the peace for the county of Albany, and a captain of a company of foot.

He seems to have been a punctual and industrious man, was covetous of land, and was fond of the power which wealth and office confer. He gave freely of his substance, when the colony or his church was in need. In 1689 few subscribed a greater sum than he subscribed for the defense of the frontier. No one, neither Van Rensselaer nor Livingston, the richest men of their day in the valley of the upper Hudson, paid a larger sum than he paid for the support of Godfrey Dellius, the zealous minister of the Dutch Reformed Church of Albany.

Marte Gerritse died in 1636, at his houwerij on the west side of the Hudson, an estate of several hundred acres, which was afterward owned by James Van Rensselaer. It is an apparently well-founded tradition of the family that a party of Canadian Indians attacked Marte Gerritse's house, with the intention of carrying him off as a prisoner. He resisted the attack and was killed in the affray. It is also said that the Indian arrow-head which pierced him was not removed from his body at the time of his burial. But, in 1699, did the Canadian Indians use bows and arrows in their marauding expeditions?

Marte Gerritse left a large estate in land, lots in Albany, a farm just below Albany, and an undivided interest in the Catskill Patent, in the Cox-sackie Patent, and in the Corlaers Kill Patent.
