This year was marked by unprecedented need in our community, but it was defined by an outpouring of unprecedented support. In the days, weeks, and months following the spring outbreak of Covid-19 and this summer’s resurgence of the Black Lives Matter movement, Central Texans are increasingly looking for ways to volunteer, organize, and advocate for the causes closest to their hearts. As the hometown headquarters for residents looking to give back locally, at I Live Here I Give Here we doubled down on our vision for Central Texas to become the most generous community in the nation.

This fall, we were overwhelmed by the response to our Austin Involved Board Internship Program, which trains and prepares community members for effective nonprofit board leadership. In partnership with Austin Community College Center for Nonprofit Studies, we delivered a multi-session virtual program to 160 participants. And thanks to our 10 community outreach partners, 50% of these participants were BIPOC, which advances our community’s need for greater equity and more diverse voices in the nonprofit sector.

To connect program participants with nonprofit board opportunities, we hosted a joint session on Diversity, Equity, Inclusion and Access with nonprofit leaders, promoted the Austin Young Chamber’s nonprofit fair, and introduced them to opportunities through Mission Capital and The New Philanthropists. Finally, to remove barriers for those who want to serve their community, former I Live Here I Give Here board member Terri Broussard Williams, funded the Momentum Award, a one time $500 scholarship to assist up to three first-time board members with their board commitment gifts.

We’ll continue to stay connected with our program participants via a LinkedIn group as they continue their journeys to becoming more engaged community leaders. Thank you for being a critical part of the local generosity movement!

This fall, we were overwhelmed by the response to our Austin Involved Board Internship Program, offered in partnership with Austin Community College Center for Nonprofit Studies. Through the program, we trained and prepared 160 community members for effective nonprofit board leadership. And new this year, a grant from the Topfer Family Foundation made it possible for us to develop a special Nonprofit Track for our members, free of charge. The interactive two-session track had 232 registrants from 114 nonprofit organizations! The session titles were: Engaging Your Board in Fundraising During the Age of Covid-19 and Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Access in Nonprofits: A Panel Discussion.

In addition to providing a fundraising platform on AAD, we’ll continue to host year-round training for our nonprofit members and to help community members on their journeys to nonprofit board leadership. Thank you for being a critical part of supporting our mission!

I really enjoyed the breakout sessions. It was impactful to hear from other nonprofits and to share tips and challenges as we all navigate the pandemic.
