It is imperative that all students have access to an equitable delivery of arts education that includes dance, media arts, music, theatre, and visual arts that supports their education and well-being, taught by certified arts educators in partnership with community arts providers.

As teaching and learning continue to evolve, our commitment to provide rich and varied educational experiences remain strong. The arts provide connections to a student's family, community, and to understanding our society. The arts play an important role in the lives of all students, including the traditionally underrepresented, those with special needs, and from low-income families. Here’s why:

Arts Education is key to unlocking potential in our students.

Students prepare for career, college, and new opportunities through the arts. Self-awareness, self-efficacy, self-management and perseverance, social awareness and relationship skills are central to any arts education activity, no matter the age and ability of the student or the environment in which the learning takes place. The arts, with their strong emphasis on team-building and self-reflection, are supremely suited to ignite and strengthen students’ interest in learning through collaboration, while simultaneously fostering creativity, critical thinking, and communication skills. The arts help students learn how to design and build their own lives both now and into an ever-changing future.
Arts Education nurtures the creation of a welcoming school environment where students can express themselves in a safe and positive way.

Students and adults come together through the arts to create a healthy and inclusive school community. The arts, through a rich partnership among certified arts educators, school leaders, parents, and community arts providers, play a valuable role in helping students and their families build and sustain community and cultural connections.

Arts Education is part of a well-rounded education for all students as understood and supported by federal and state policymakers.

Student learning in the arts is recognized in federal and state policy. As defined in ESSA, “music and the arts” are part of a well-rounded education. Every state in the nation recognizes the importance of the arts as reflected in rigorous PreK-12 state arts standards. Forty-six states require an arts credit to receive a high school diploma, and 43 states have instructional requirements in the arts for elementary and secondary schools. As noted in Arts Education for America’s Students: A Shared Endeavor: “An education without the arts is inadequate.”

The healing and unifying power of the arts became increasingly evident during the pandemic. We have seen and heard it play out through works of art on sidewalks, shared musical moments from porches, in plays and dance performances, and every other imaginable iteration of art making. As states and schools continue to work through post-pandemic challenges, arts education must remain central to a well-rounded education, taught by well-resourced arts educators, and fully funded to support the well-being of all students and the entire school community.
