Rossitza Todorova

Memory of a landscape - In this series, Rossitza Todorova explores how landscape embodies the idea of time: past, present, and future. The landscape reflects our memories by helping us recall and associate a place with history. It captures our present by allowing us to let go and be in the moment. And shows us our future, metaphorically, and literally as it reveals the journey ahead.

In the words of Ken Taylor, "one of our deepest needs is for a scene of identity and belonging and a common denominator in this is human attachment to landscape and how we find identity in landscape and place. Landscape, therefore, is not simply what we see, but a way of seeing: we see it with our eyes but interpret it with our mind and ascribe value to landscape for intangible - spiritual - reasons. Landscape can, therefore, be seen as a cultural construct in which our sense of place and memories inhere."

In “Memory of a landscape,” Todorova depicts the landscape of the Great Basin inspired by walks around Reno, hiking in Tahoe, and her recent residency at Playa Summer Lake in Southern Oregon. Her images are interrupted by scrolling lines that exist in the space between the viewer and the vista beyond. The forms are visual metaphors for what we bring as we view the desert. They are the reflections of ourselves that we place on the landscape. As Henri Frédéric Amiel eloquently said, "Any landscape is a condition of the spirit."
