This painting represents the type of music that got me through the pandemic. During the pandemic shutdown music was a vital thing in my life. It was something that helped me distract myself from the problems that were happening around the world. Music was something I could dance, cry, and enjoy. For example, many times there was just silence around me, with nothing else to do but music, it was something that filled the silence.