We love Outdoor School staff, especially those that work directly with students every day! In September, Friends of Outdoor School hosted a conference for these talented educators.

This gathering stemmed from the Student-facing Staff Roundtable that Sophia has been hosting for about a year and a half. The group examined issues they faced including the seasonality of the work, pay and benefits, and the desire for a more connected network of folks in their role. Thanks to a grant from OSU Extension Service Outdoor School, Friends of Outdoor School worked with seasonal and student-facing Outdoor School staff to put on a gathering that would meet their specific needs, be held at a time of year that was accessible, and broaden and strengthen the statewide network to support their work with kids.

Eighty staff members came together to learn and connect with each other. Attendees learned from mental health professionals who are part of the Outdoor School community about supporting the mental health needs of students and their own. Other experts led sessions on and examined how to support gender expansive students and Latinx communities in outdoor education. Attendees also taught one another about increasing student engagement and motivation, transitioning from the role of student leader to staff member, supporting others and caring for themselves, managing burnout, student leader recruitment, and their favorite recreation activities and field games. Some of the highlights included learning each other’s Outdoor School stories and how Outdoor School has influenced their lives as well as connecting and sharing resources. We can’t forget about the two wonderful campfires and lots of wonderful shared meals and social hours!

A huge thank you to all of the folks who made this experience possible, including the ODS programs who supported their staff to attend. We look forward to supporting this awesome group of Outdoor School staff moving forward!

Since its inception in 1957, Oregon Outdoor School has been an integral part of school. This has provided opportunities for teachers to connect the Outdoor School experience to students’ learning to expand, amplify, and reinforce skills and concepts in the classroom.

Friends of Outdoor School has been working to support those connections through partnership with the Oregon Department of Education (ODE). Last month we had an opportunity to meet with Dr. Charlene Williams, the new Director of the Department, and Dr. Spirit Brooks, Director of OSU Extension Service Outdoor School. In a rich conversation we explored what drives us as educators, opportunities and challenges facing Outdoor School, and how Outdoor School supports key initiatives and priorities for ODE.

In particular, we talked about how learning at Outdoor School develops science literacy skills and how the Outdoor School network has been investing in supporting wellness and belonging for Oregon’s diverse students.

Our partnership continues with ODE as we work on collecting data to evaluate the program, explore ways for high school leaders to build career skills, and help educators continually improve their craft.

The pictures above are from a workshop put on by OSU Extension Service Outdoor School about integrating Outdoor School into the classroom in Bend, Oregon.

“As a 6th grader ODS gave me a love for learning in and about nature. As a high schooler ODS gave me confidence and a feeling of acceptance. As a specific needs volunteer ODS gave me a deeper compassion, understanding, and drive to work with people of all abilities. As a program leader ODS gave me a love of teaching and community.” -Anna “Captain Pickle” Stout
