The Consequences of Sin

The clear message of this passage is that sin doesn’t pay, even when it gives you what you wanted.

Rebekah’s plan may win the blessing for her favorite son, but it will also result in his exile from their home forever.

The Triumph of Grace

God’s purposes to bless his people are eternally secure. Grace is at work in the lives of the patriarchs, and the grace of God will not let them go. In spite of their sin and even through their sin, God can and will achieve what he has planned. He will bring his promised Redeemer, not from picture-perfect parentage but from the offspring of a long line of sinners.¹
