Angel Island State Park

Angel Island, the largest island in San Francisco Bay, is a park dedicated to the preservation of the island’s abundant natural and cultural resources.

In 1954, the California State Park Commission acquired Ayala Cove. In the following months, Parks acquired additional acreage above the cove. In 1962, the island was turned over to the California Department of Parks and Recreation.

Prior to its designation as a California State Park, Angel Island served an array of functions. For thousands of years the island was used as a fishing outpost by the Coast Miwok.

In 1910, the Angel Island Immigration Station opened. During its thirty years in service approximately 500,000 immigrants from Asia, Europe, and South America passed through Angel Island.

In the 1970s, Chinese poetry was rediscovered in the Immigration Station barracks. Since then, Angel Island State Park has become a popular destination for genealogical research, for discovering the history of immigration on the West Coast, and has remained a popular site for recreation.

Angel Island Immigration Museum

AIIM is a place where visitors can explore the full complexity of immigration to the United States through the Pacific Coast. Housed in the former immigration hospital, the museum presents personal stories, immigration policies, and social issues from both historic and contemporary times.

The exhibits draw upon the diversity of Angel Island’s history by highlighting stories of immigrants from China, Korea, Vietnam, Russia, Japan, India, Mexico, the Philippines, and more.

Whether it’s the topic of undocumented immigration, medical exclusion, ethnic quotas, or picture brides, the AIIM invites consideration of immigration issues and celebrates the accomplishments of immigrants living in America today.

Thanks to generous funding from federal and state governments and private donations from AIISF supporters, much of the immigration station site and the detention barracks were restored and reopened in 2009.

AIIM bookends the 40 years of restoration efforts and will offer new exhibits, programs, and educational opportunities for the public.
Angel Island Immigration Station Historic Advisory Committee (AIISHAC)
Immigrant Heritage Award Honoree

In 1970, the Angel Island Immigration Station was slated for demolition because of its deteriorated condition; but the discovery of Chinese poetry that had been carved into the walls of the detention barracks saved it from destruction and led to renewed interest in the Angel Island Immigration Station. Most importantly, the discovery of poetry increased awareness of the need to access the vivid lessons of sacrifice and triumph in the history of immigration.

Sparked by the discovery, Paul Chow, Chris Chow, Connie Young Yu, and other members of the Asian American community formed AIISHAC. The organization studied how best to preserve the station for historical interpretation. In July 1976, their hard work came to fruition as the state legislature appropriated $250,000 to restore and preserve the Immigration Station as a state monument.

The barracks opened to the public in 1983, and members of AIISHAC created the Angel Island Immigration Station Foundation (AIISF) to continue preservation and educational efforts for the site and increase awareness of the contributions of Pacific Coast immigrants.
“It was part of my job to go around and see what’s going on around the island. So, I went to see the Immigration Station with a flashlight. And I noticed that even though it wasn’t open to the public, I noticed these carvings. In fact, I was amazed; it was everywhere.”

- Alexander Weiss

Ranger Alexander Weiss
Spirit of Angel Island Award Honoree

From his family’s escape from Austria in 1940 to his days as a Freedom Rider; and from growing up in the Fillmore during its early jazz days to his involvement at Hearst Castle and Natural Bridges State Parks, Weiss has been a nonconformist, most often to the public’s benefit.

In 1970, Alex became a park ranger on Angel Island. That same year, he discovered Chinese writing on the walls of the detention barracks. Although the former Immigration Station was scheduled for demolition, Alex reached out to his professor at San Francisco State University and a movement to save the site was born.

After Angel Island, Alex continued his work with the California State Parks, the San Francisco Zoo, and Alameda County Registrar of Voters until his retirement in 2009.

AIISF presents this award to Alexander Weiss’ wife, Carol Ellison, in memory of his service and vision.

Exhibit
Opening Doors is about hope, pursuing new opportunities, and immigrant contributions. The exhibit reveals how immigration policies were pivotal turning points for generations of the past and continue to shape citizenship today.

In The Shadows is about overcoming exclusion and enduring detention. A diverse range of historical and contemporary stories explores the impact of divisive laws on individual lives and American culture.

Under the Microscope focuses on the medical theories and that impacted immigration enforcement in the early 20th century. When contemplating health regulations, questions about responsibility, control, compassion, and safety arise.

Opening AIIM completes stage one of the hospital project. There are several rooms inside the museum that are not yet furnished. If you are interested in contributing to the future of AIIM, you can make a donation at www.aiisf.org/donate.
About AIISF

Angel Island Immigration Station Foundation (AIISF) raises awareness of the experience of Immigration into America through the Pacific. AIISF collects and preserves the rich stories and personal journeys of thousands of immigrants and shares them with visitors and everyone living in America through education initiatives and public programs. The Angel Island Immigration Station reminds us of the complicated history of immigration in America. It serves as a symbol of our willingness to learn from our past to ensure that our nation keeps its promise of liberty and freedom.
