Woodlawn Cemetery in Elmira, New York is internationally known as the final resting place of America’s best-loved author, Mark Twain (Samuel Clemens). One of the first rural garden-style cemeteries in the United States, it is listed in The National Register of Historic Places.

Established in 1858, Woodlawn is comprised of 184 scenic acres. Its paths and avenues wind through hills and lawns and wooded areas with towering trees - a sylvan setting for venerable family plots and mausoleums, lovely marble sculptures and hand-carved memorial stones. The wrought iron gates and fences of Woodlawn encompass a treasury of Chemung County history, including the stories of beloved citizens who contributed in many and varied ways, here and in the larger world. Among those interred here, in addition to the Langdon-Clemens family, are:

Hal Roach, pioneer Hollywood film-maker
John Jones, escaped slave and chronicler of the Confederate dead from the Elmira Civil War prison camp
Ernie Davis, football great and first black recipient of the Heisman trophy
Ross Marvin, team member of Admiral Peary’s North Pole Expedition
Governor Lucius Robinson, State of New York
Governor Alexander W. Randall, State of Wisconsin, US Postmaster General, envoy to the Vatican
Major General Matthew Carpenter, Revolutionary War and War of 1812
Brevet Brig. Gen. William M. Gregg, Civil War
J. Sloat Fassett, NY State Senator, US Representative
Matthias Arnott, aviation pioneer, patron of the arts

Mark Twain’s Grave

Buried here are members of the family of Jervis Langdon, prominent businessman and abolitionist, whose daughter Olivia became the wife of Samuel Clemens (Mark Twain). Prominent is the twelve-foot shaft of Rhode Island granite which commemorates both Samuel Clemens and Ossip Gabrilovitsch, conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and husband of Clemens’ daughter Clara. The monument was designed by Emfred Anderson. “Mark Twain” was a riverboat pilots’ term for two fathoms (12 feet).

The Fireman's Monument

is the work of world-renowned Ohio sculptor John Segesmon. Its brother statue is located on the grounds of the Texas Capital in Austin. The monument was erected by the area firemen’s association in 1903.

Woodlawn National Cemetery and John Jones

Adjacent to Woodlawn Cemetery is the 10.5-acre Woodlawn National Cemetery, which dates back to the Civil War Era.

In 1864, a training camp at Elmira was turned into a prisoner of war camp. The facilities were not adequate to house the thousands of Confederate prisoners brought there, and many died of exposure, malnutrition and smallpox. Each day, dead soldiers were placed in coffins, brought to the cemetery and placed side by side in a trench for burial.

John Jones, an escaped slave who had found freedom in Elmira, was then sexton of the cemetery. Jones kept a meticulous record of each Confederate burial. In 1907, when the federal government erected small marble headstones on the graves, it was possible to inscribe them with the soldier’s name, company, regiment and grave number, thanks to John Jones’ records.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy erected a monument in memory of those Confederate prisoners of war who died while imprisoned at Elmira.

The US Government erected the Shohola Monument in 1911 to commemorate a tragic railroad accident that took the lives of both Confederate and Union soldiers during the Civil War.

In 1988, the Chemung County veterans dedicated a monument in memory of all veterans from New York and Pennsylvania. Through 2007, remains of 8,968 veterans were buried in Woodlawn.

The Woodlawn National Cemetery

is open daily from 8 a.m. until dusk.
