Letter-Writing Action: Protest the Denial of Tribal Recognition for the Duwamish

Overview:

On July 2nd, 2015, the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) ruled to deny federal recognition to the Duwamish Tribe after a decades-long legal battle. The Duwamish are the First People of the city of Seattle, which took its name from the Duwamish leader Chief S'ahl. In the 1855 Point Elliott Treaty, the Duwamish ceded territory—but not sovereignty—to settlers, in exchange for reservation land and other rights. More than 150 years later, the U.S. government has not honored this agreement.

Today, as residents of Seattle, we must continue to support the Duwamish in their struggle for justice. Duwamish Tribal Chairperson Cecile Hansen has called for “an uprising from the citizens of this city.” In particular, she has asked us to write letters protesting the BIA’s decision.

Please join us in writing letters expressing solidarity with the Duwamish. Below, you will find contact information and sample letters for multiple decisionmakers.

The contents of this packet were authored by members of the Duwamish Solidarity Group (DSG), originally a subgroup of the Coalition of Anti-Racist Whites (CARW).

Letter-writing tips:

- Personalize your letters!
  - You don’t have to give a full history or legal analysis of the decision; feel free to express your personal feelings and experience.
- Be firm but polite.
  - Please don’t write anything that could be detrimental to the Tribe’s struggle.
- Keep writing letters!
  - Please also reach out City of Seattle and King County officials to ask them what they are doing to support the Duwamish.

[Address of Recipient]

Dear [Name/Title of Recipient],

We stand with the Duwamish – the First People of Seattle – and support their right to self-determination, self-governance, and the other essential responsibilities and powers entitled to federally recognized tribes. We urge you to support the Tribe’s efforts to obtain federal recognition for a government-to-government relationship with the United States and to provide long overdue closure on a process initiated generations ago.

Chief Si’ahl (Seattle) of the Duwamish and Suquamish Tribes was the lead signatory of the Treaty of Point Elliott of 1855. Located in the largest city in Washington State, which bears the Chief’s name, the Duwamish Tribe maintains its separate and distinct cultural identity, exercises authority, and engages in policy advocacy on behalf of its membership. We ask you to support and represent the Duwamish Tribe in its efforts to hold the United States Government accountable for the promises it made in that Treaty to this day.

The Duwamish Tribe’s leadership has confronted, contested, and challenged injustices in multiple legal and bureaucratic forums. They work to hold the government to account for its failure to deliver on its promises under the Point Elliott Treaty and assert the rights of the Duwamish as a Treaty Tribe. Due to the tribal leadership’s relentless push for justice, in 2001, the Bureau of Indian Affairs under the Clinton Administration found sufficient evidence to re-recognize the Duwamish Tribe, only to have it reversed by the Interior Department under the Bush Administration.

While working to clarify its federal status with the government, based upon the fact that the Duwamish Tribe of Indians is a Treaty Tribe and that has never been invalidated, the Duwamish became landowners. In 2009, the Duwamish built a traditional Longhouse and Cultural Center, the first longhouse to be built in 150 years in Seattle. The Tribe created a public regional educational resource to promote the history and education about the Duwamish while also contributing to the environmental health and regulatory oversight of the Duwamish River as an EPA Superfund site. The Duwamish have continued to contribute to the welfare of the citizens of Seattle and Puget Sound emphasizing marginalized populations.

We urge you to champion the Tribe’s efforts. Federal re-recognition of the Duwamish Tribe can be reinstated legislatively, administratively, or judicially this year with your support. We must reinstate the recognition of the Duwamish Tribe so that the healing process can begin. Thank you.

Sincerely,
[Signature]
