Magnum Live Lab: two weeks to photograph London

A Magnum photographer with decades of experience leads a workshop for Magnum's Live Lab, giving students and emerging photographers a chance to learn from one of the masters. The course is held at the Magnum London Gallery, where participants are given the opportunity to shoot in the city and then come together to discuss their work with the mentor. The goal is to give the students a unique insight into the world of professional photography, from the technical aspects to the creative process.

In order to participate, students are required to submit their work in a portfolio format. The selection process is based on the quality and originality of the imagery, as well as the artist's potential for growth and development. Successful applicants are then invited to attend the workshop, which includes a series of lectures, workshops, and one-on-one sessions with the mentor. The course is designed to be intensive and hands-on, giving students the chance to work closely with a professional photographer and learn the ins and outs of the trade.

The Magnum Live Lab is a unique opportunity for emerging photographers to gain valuable insight and guidance from one of the world's leading photographers. Whether you're just starting out or looking to take your work to the next level, this course is an excellent way to meet the challenges of professional photography and develop your unique vision.
Magnum Live Lab: curating the look of London

London's Al Story launches new Staten Island office.