NON-STOP DOMESTIC VIOLENCE RESPONSE

LA CASA DE LAS MADRES
2023 ANNUAL REPORT
Dear La Casa Community,

It has been well-documented that domestic violence rates spiked significantly during the days and months of the COVID-19 pandemic quarantines and lockdowns when victims and survivors were forced to stay in close quarters with abusers. As we near four years after the initial announcement of the COVID-19 public health emergency, we are starting to assess its profound and lasting effects on our lives.

For domestic violence, abuse is still very much prevalent. Contributing factors to the pervasiveness of domestic violence that were exacerbated post-pandemic include mental illness, substance use, economic instability, and lack of investment in healthcare, education, and housing. Unfortunately, households are still at an elevated risk for domestic violence and will continue to be for the foreseeable future.

That said, we proudly announce that at La Casa de las Madres, we have maintained and exceeded pre-pandemic service levels—a testament to our team’s dedication. Despite the challenges, our commitment to addressing the increasing need for domestic violence support services remained steadfast. Our confidential Emergency Shelter served up to 36 survivors daily, while the Drop-In Center reached 768 survivors and their children this year.

Now more than ever, we are energized in our movement to end abuse. We have reinvigorated our community outreach and education approach by utilizing online platforms and shedding light on the dynamics of domestic violence.

We re-established community partnerships that were on pause due to pandemic restrictions. Amongst these is our Teen Program, where we provide critical educational workshops to teens on healthy relationships at local high schools, aiming to identify early signs of abusive relationships and end the cycle of abuse. We have also created new community partnerships that address the underlying issues of domestic violence. Specifically, in July 2023, we began a new partnership with Dignity Health, collaborating with medical practitioners to address the intersectionality of human trafficking and intimate partner violence.

In 2024, we will continue being at the forefront of domestic violence prevention locally in San Francisco. We look forward to joining sister agencies as a united front to magnify the impacts domestic violence has on the community. We will also lend our voices and nearly half a century of experience combating domestic violence whenever needed. Together, as a greater community, we can work towards positive changes in the prevalence and severity of domestic violence.

With gratitude and determination,

Sincerely,

EXPANDING EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES

To actively contribute to the well-being of our community, the provision of educational resources remains a crucial endeavor. Two key initiatives underscore the enduring significance of strategic partnerships in achieving shared goals.

40-HOUR DOMESTIC VIOLENCE TRAINING

A core piece of La Casa’s mission is to educate the community about domestic violence by redefining public perceptions about this complex and pervasive issue. La Casa de las Madres’ 40-Hour Domestic Violence Counselor Training Program is the most comprehensive educational offering for individuals in the community looking to expand their knowledge around domestic violence. Three times a year, La Casa hosts the training consisting of half California state mandated material and half La Casa and San Francisco community organization material. This program is the prerequisite to participate in direct volunteer service at La Casa that involves engaging with La Casa’s clients.

“Just knowing I am well equipped to support victims is the most rewarding thing after completing the 40 hour training.”
-Raina Ng, Winter 2023 40-Hr

TEEN DATING VIOLENCE HIGHLIGHT

We look forward to our continued partnership with the San Francisco Unified School District, reaching high school students in the area to talk about healthy relationships and provide them with resources and peer counseling.

In FY23, La Casa reignited its arsenal of co-located, community based partnerships, with the San Francisco Unified School District, the Department on the Status of Women (DOSW), and the Office on Violence Against Women (OVW).

Since 2020, 50 community members have completed the 40 hour training, ensuring La Casa volunteers have the tools necessary to support survivors.
Grace* found herself in distress as the police come for the 8th time. For the past 20 years, Grace’s partner, the father of her children, had berated her, demanded the money she earned, destroyed her credit, and given her too many bruises to count. She didn’t feel like she lived in fear every single day, but she was tired – physically and emotionally. When Grace had tried to leave him in the past, her partner tracked her down, stalked her, sweetened her up, and made her feel like no one else would ever have her. She hated the way he talked to the children sometimes, and she knew she wasn’t the only one being harmed. Her oldest daughter was in a relationship now, and Grace worried about the behavior her daughter had learned to put up with.

So, this eighth time, Grace was ready to talk to a La Casa crisis counselor, and they decided together that Grace and her children would come to the shelter. Once in that safe space, Grace and her children began to process their trauma, access counseling, and seek the help required to move forward with their new lives. Grace found a steady job that qualified her for La Casa’s Housing First for Domestic Violence Victims subsidy and support program. She and her family continued to engage in therapy.

La Casa connected her with legal services that helped Grace gain full custody of her children and set up custody exchanges with her batterer that prioritized the safety of Grace and the children. Her family’s journey was not easy, but Grace was determined they would stay safe on a new path. They adopted a pet to support the family’s emotional needs, her son started a new school, and Grace learned to be independent, budget expenses, and carve out time for self-care to stay on track. She accessed food pantry programs, domestic violence, and parenting support groups, and signed up for the affordable housing lottery. All this time, Grace was supported by her Housing First rental subsidy, which provides 12 months of support to help survivors ramp up savings and build financial capacity. When the time came for Grace to take on the full burden of her rent, Grace and her family were ready. She has gained so many skills and so much confidence in her ability to do what she needs to do and where to go for help when she needs it.

*Identifiers changed to preserve confidentiality

Grace is one of 290 women and children accessing La Casa’s confidential safehouse for food, shelter, and comprehensive support in FY23. Our emergency shelter offers up to 8 weeks of tailored support to prevent survivors from facing the untenable choice between homelessness and safety.

30% of La Casa’s clients are immigrants.

The average length of a shelter stay is 33 days.
At La Casa we take fiscal responsibility seriously, putting every dollar to work to provide crucial resources to survivors in need.

“We choose to support with La Casa de las Madres because we were moved by La Casa’s mission and impressive infrastructure they’ve built that gives survivors the tools to transform their lives. The impact they have in the community is incredible and we were honored to partner with them to raise more resources and increase awareness on domestic violence.”
