Circle of Control

During difficult times, it can help to take big stressors and break them down into what you can control and what you can’t.

Think about what’s stressing you out. In the outer ring, write the things that you have zero (or very little) control over.

In the middle ring, write the things that you can influence, but not entirely control.

In the inner ring, write the things that you can mostly or entirely control.

If you’re unsure how to start, see the example on the next page!
Example:

- No control
  - COVID-19
  - Social distancing guidelines

- Some control
  - Work schedule
  - How well I sleep
  - How often I talk to friends
  - Whether or not I get COVID-19
  - Whether or not everyone else quarantines/washes their hands

- Most control
  - Giving myself 8 hours to sleep
  - Moving my body regularly
  - Reaching out to friends
  - Following hand-washing guidelines
  - Getting involved in local organizing
  - National politics
  - My health
  - My partner's availability
  - Financial obligations (i.e., rent)

© 2020 Miriam Mogilevsky, LISW-S  miriammogilevsky.me
Now what?

You can use these prompts to think more about your Circle of Control and how to use it to manage stress and anxiety.

1. What was your experience with filling out the circles? What came up for you?

2. Do any of your circles have noticeably more or fewer items in them than the others? Which were easiest to think of answers for?

3. Which circles do you tend to think about the most when you're feeling worried?

4. Look at your "No control" and "Some control" items. Can any of them be broken down into smaller pieces that might go further in? (For instance, you can't control social distancing guidelines, but you can probably control how you choose to implement them.

5. Look at your "Some control" and "Most control" items. Should any of them be broken down into smaller pieces that might go further out? It's important not to expect yourself to control things that aren't actually totally under your control.

6. How would it feel to take some concrete steps with your "Most control" items? Try breaking them down into smaller steps to help motivate yourself.

There's another blank set of circles on the next page if you'd like to try the exercise again!