GLBT Historical Society 2010–2014

The last five years have been a period of extraordinary growth for the GLBT Historical Society. The archives program has added significantly more materials and processed hundreds of collections. As a result the archives is larger than ever before, with more materials being used by more researchers. The Society opened the first GLBT History Museum in the nation, which has been visited by over 60,000 people from around the world.

GLBT History Museum

In 2011 the Society opened the first GLBT History Museum in the United States in the Castro neighborhood of San Francisco. This was the culmination of many years of exhibits organized both in our offices and temporary exhibit spaces.

Tens of thousands of people have visited the museum since 2011, and it has received significant media attention around the globe. Coming to the museum represents most visitors’ first encounter with queer history and the first time they have seen exhibits that include historically significant GLBT materials. The museum serves tourists, students, and others who know little of San Francisco’s queer history. It also serves people who lived this history and are seeing their own stories represented—often for the first time.

To address this diverse audience, the museum’s 1,600 square feet of space is divided into three galleries, which allows multiple themes and frequent changes of exhibits. Twenty exhibits have been curated since the opening, with two to four new displays planned each year.

The museum has hosted over 100 author talks, panel discussions, film screenings, and special events since it opened. Hundreds of groups have toured the museum, many on docent-led tours. Most of these are local student groups.

New Collections, Greater Access, More Researchers

The archives program has been the core work of the GLBT Historical Society since the organization was founded in 1985. The Society began as an all-volunteer group determined to save GLBT historic materials in the depths of the AIDS pandemic, and now the Society operates one of the largest archives of queer historic materials in the world. These collections are used by hundreds of authors, filmmakers, and other researchers each year. Hundreds of books and films have been created using materials from the archives.

The archives continue to grow. In the last five years the Society accessioned [or added significant materials] to over ninety collections, some over a hundred linear feet large. Among the largest were those of the historian Alan Bérubé and the activist/entertainer José Sarria. Many were small but important; several had just a single item of historic importance. A full list is below.

Once accessioned, the Society’s archivists process the collections both to keep materials safe and make them accessible to researchers. This involves not only arranging the materials, but writing collection descriptions to post online. Large collections can take months to process and result in finding aids that are many pages long.

In the last five years, the archives team has processed over 350 collections comprising hundreds of linear feet of material and many historically important collections. This work was funded by a series of major grants, the most recent of which began in July 2014 to process the Society’s audiovisual holding and photographic image collections. This project is called “Visions and Voices of GLBT History”.

Over the last five years, the Society digitized over 1,000 hours of audiovisual materials to make them more accessible to filmmakers and other researchers. We have also licensed digital copies for our largest manuscript collections, which have been purchased by over 100 universities around the world.

Because of this work, large amounts of important queer historic materials have become accessible for the first time. Requests to access materials, both in the Society’s research room and remotely, have grown substantially over the last five years and will continue to increase as more material becomes available. The Society’s work will result in more books, more films, more art, and further efforts to tell the diverse stories of LGBT people to future generations.
