The GLBT Historical Society & GLBT History Museum in 2011

The GLBT Historical Society opened the first GLBT History Museum in the United States at the beginning of the year, attracting tens of thousands of visitors, generating international visibility and creating a base for expanded programming. We also launched a major new project in the archives. This report offers an overview of our new and ongoing accomplishments in 2011.

The Archive
The work of the archives, keeping the collections safe and accessible, never stops. This year Managing Archivist Rebekah Kim and her team assisted over 100 researchers, accessioned over 20 linear feet of new materials and digitized over 300 film and audio items—including newly discovered film footage of Harvey Milk.

The society’s two-year project to survey and process our manuscript collections is well underway. Dr. Marjorie Bryer, the project archivist, has largely completed an extensive survey of all manuscript collections. The team also has been processing collections including that of noted historian Allan Bérubé, which includes more than 100 linear feet of documents.

Communications Program
GLBT history, particularly its inclusion in school textbooks, has become a subject of heated debate with blocked websites in schools and a possible ballot initiative to suppress mentions in textbooks in California. The society is increasingly drawn into this discussion as an advocate for inclusion of our history.

The opening of museum was covered by media in over 75 nations, and interest remains strong. The international visibility of the museum also has led to requests for presentations about our approach to queer public history. The society has made many such presentations, including at the International Maneo Conference (Berlin) and the Harvard Law School LAMBDA Conference.

Opportunities for Growth in 2012 and Beyond

There is significant public demand for the GLBT Historical Society to increase our work in several areas. Here’s how we’d make use of additional resources:

Add to the Archives
The society’s archives are reaching capacity. Inventorying large artifacts and artworks for off-site storage would open up space for new collections. In addition, new part-time staff would enable us to increase research hours. Estimated cost: $25,000.

Expand the Oral History Program
Part-time staff coordinating volunteers could create an ongoing initiative to record the memories of our community members — a vital contribution to preserving our history. Estimated cost: $25,000.

Increase Availability of Docent-Led Tours
Part-time staff working with interns and volunteers could undertake a campaign to expand our program of tours of the museum for schools, seniors and others. Estimated cost: $25,000.

Produce Additional Exhibitions & Programs
Regularly producing new and updated exhibits and organizing more frequent programs would help us represent the wide range of GLBT histories. Estimated cost: $50,000.

Enhance Online Content
Demand for access to the initiatives of the society extends far beyond San Francisco. A concerted effort to post Web versions of our exhibitions and programs would bring our content to a much wider public. Estimated cost: $20,000.
