The Just City Lab investigates the definition of urban justice and its relationship to physical and social well-being, and advocates for design and planning that contribute to the creation of equitable and inclusive urban spaces. The lab is based on a holistic approach that examines the interplay of core principles, values and metrics in terms of social, economic, political, cultural, and environmental factors. The Just City Lab’s work is informed by extensive research and collaboration with various stakeholders, including academics, practitioners, policymakers, and community members. Their goal is to create a more just and equitable urban environment, one that promotes social justice and well-being for all.