1. Background

Under the customary land system in Ghana, there are a number of land-owning groups who are indigenes and have collective ownership of a large area of land. The boundaries of the land that each land-owning group holds is called a traditional area[1] and each land-owning group has leaders who are appointed according to the customs and traditions of the people.

There is usually one appointed Head who works with a number of other leaders under a well laid out hierarchy of authority. The appointed Head is usually referred to as a Traditional Leader (Usually, there is a female counterpart of all the leadership positions under the customary arrangements, but the females are not included in customary land administration). Traditional Areas in Ghana therefore represent the traditional administrative boundaries for Traditional Leaders and the land within the boundaries of the Traditional Area all fall under the jurisdiction of the Traditional Leaders. Even though all Traditional Leaders represent the authority for community leadership and oversight in matters relating to land and community governance, there are instances where the oversight for land and community is split between different leaders.

While some Traditional Leaders are identified as Paramount Chiefs, others are Overlords, Family Heads or Clan Heads. There are many Traditional Leaders superintending over many traditional areas in Ghana. Information on the number of traditional areas, the name of the leader of the traditional area and the type of land system they practice is not easily available in Ghana. Yet, such information is relevant for all prospective investors, local people and even government, for purposes of land acquisition and policy engagement. COLANDEF has started a process of compiling this information and publicizing it for the benefit of all who engage in the land sector in Ghana.

[1] The traditional area boundaries are not the same as the political administrative boundaries which are defined by the formal government. In a few cases, the political administrative boundaries are the same as the traditional area boundaries, but this is not always the case. Therefore, in discussions on customary land administration, it is always best to situate the discussions within the traditional area boundaries.
2. Regional Distribution of Traditional Areas

Prior to the creation of 6 new additional regions in February 2019, Ghana had 10 administrative regions of varying sizes. Each region has a number of Traditional Areas, although the size of a region does not necessarily determine the number of Traditional Areas that the region has. Thus, some regions have over 50 Traditional Areas while others have fewer Traditional Areas as seen in Figure 1 below.

![Map of Ghana showing the distribution of Traditional Areas by region]

As of June 2019, the total number of Traditional Areas in Ghana: 300. COLANDEF is building this data systematically and therefore will be updated regularly as information on other Traditional Areas not already captured, are identified.

The Traditional Leader of each Traditional Area does not work in isolation. There is a constitutionally recognized body called the Traditional Council with the Paramount Chief or Overlord as the President. Other members are the Divisional Chiefs and Sub-chiefs. The Traditional Council serves as the platform for traditional authority consultation and decision making on land and other community issues. In the Family Land areas, the Traditional Councils have jurisdiction in community governance and not land governance because the land is under the authority of Family Heads and Clan Heads, not under the authority of the Chiefs. However, in stool and skin land areas, the traditional councils have jurisdiction over both land and community governance.
3. Land Tenure Systems in Ghana

There are two main types of land tenure systems in Ghana, as briefly explained below:

1. Customary System- This system is operated by the traditional institutions mandated to set and apply rules derived from the customs and traditions applicable in the area. The rules under this system are unwritten unlike in the state system. About 78% of all lands in Ghana fall under this system and are held under the authority of Traditional leaders. Depending on the type of traditional authority that holds the overall decision-making power over the customary land in question, customary lands in Ghana are further grouped into three main types as follows:

   a. Clan & family lands- Clan and Family Heads are the custodians of these lands and are responsible for the overall decision-making on the lands.

   b. Stool lands- Paramount Chiefs are the custodians of stool lands and are responsible for the overall decision making on the land. Every Paramount Chief is supported by Divisional Chiefs and Local Chiefs in governing over the lands in their jurisdiction.

   c. Skin lands- The Over Lord is the custodian of skin lands and is responsible for the overall decision-making on the land. He is supported by Paramount chiefs who have jurisdiction over designated portions of the skin land. In some skin land areas, there are 'Tindamba' who are recognized as spiritual heads over customary lands and are influential in decision making. Paramount Chiefs in skin land areas are supported by Divisional Chiefs and Local Chiefs in governing over the lands in their jurisdictions.

2. State system- It is operated by formal state institutions who provide land services guided by statutes and regulations. Lands under this system are referred to as state lands and account for about 20% of all lands in Ghana. These lands were also customary lands before but were acquired later on by the government using the power of eminent domain, for public interest purposes. All state lands are held in trust by the President on behalf of the people of Ghana. In discussing the categories of lands under the two tenure systems, there is a third category known as the vested lands.
These lands are jointly held under an arrangement in which the beneficial ownership is held under the customary system, but the legal ownership is held by the state and therefore managed by the government through the Lands Commission on behalf of the land-owning communities. Vested lands represent approximately 2% of all lands.

4. The Different Types of Customary Land Systems in the Various Regions

1. Ashanti Region – Lands in this region are all stool lands.

2. Brong Ahafo Region – The dominant land system in this region is stool lands.

3. Central Region – Lands in most parts of the region are stool lands, but in some parts also are clan and family lands.

4. Eastern Region – The dominant land system is stool lands although there are few clan and family lands.

5. Greater Accra Region – Lands in most parts of the region are family and clan lands, with a few being stool lands.

6. Northern Region – Lands in this region are skin lands.

7. Upper East Region – This region has a combination of Family and Clan lands.

8. Upper West Region – This region has a combination of Family and Clan lands.

9. Volta Region – The dominant land system are clan and family lands with a few stool lands as well.

10. Western Region – Lands in this region are stool lands.
